Answer to Hitler

By Hedley Donovan.
Post Staff Writer

Senator Sheppard (Democrat), of Texas, yesterday urged conscription of America's manpower as the answer to a totalitarian threat to fight on "until all democracy and freedom have been blasted from the earth."

The chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, opening Senate debate on the Burke-Wadsworth conscription bill, forsook diplomatic generalities for a blunt assertion that a victorious Germany would attempt invasion of the New World.

From Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, came an angry reply that those who believe the United States is in imminent danger of Nazi invasion, "if they were honest, would go before the country and ask for a declaration of war against Germany right now."

Crowded galleries were repeatedly warned against demonstrations during the sharp debate.

Republicans Join Attack

Joining Wheeler in the initial attack on the draft bill were three militant Republican members of the isolationist camp, Senators Vandenberg, of Michigan; Danaher, of Connecticut, and Johnson, of California, white-haired veteran of the battle against American entry into the League of Nations.

A clear indication that Administration forces are swinging their full strength behind the bill came as Majority Leader Barkley rose half a dozen times to share the measure's defense with Senator Sheppard.

The Burke-Wadsworth bill combines voluntary enlistments with a compulsory training system "to meet the demands of an emergency in which the time element is of tragic importance," Sheppard told the Senate.

The Texan, in a 50-minute section-by-section analysis of the bill, pointed out that no men can be called up for training without a Congressional appropriation and insisted that the measure, which expires in 1945, does not contemplate conscription as part of the Nation's permanent military policy.

12,000,000 Affected

Under the bill all men from 21 to 31, a total of 12,000,000, would be required to register for compulsory military training. Deferments would be granted men with dependents and those engaged in occupations essential to the national interests, leaving some 4,500,000 able-bodied men available for immediate duty. From this pool 400,000 men would be called up in October, according to War Department plans, and another 400,000 in the spring.

Legislation already is being drafted to provide funds for the October mobilization, Sheppard said. Total cost of the Burke-Wadsworth bill during the current fiscal year would be approximately $800,000,000, he stated, while the National Guard and Reserve personnel mobilization approved by the Senate Thursday will cost $350,000,000 in the same period.

The House Military Affairs Committee is expected to approve the Guard bill at its session Monday, clearing the way for House action on the measure later in the week.

The Gallup Poll

Defense Strike Bans Favored

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.
Copyright, 1940

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 10.—As the wheels of America's national defense program begin to turn this summer in hundreds of U. S. factories, a Nation-wide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion reveals that the great majority of voters would approve curbs on both labor and industry—if necessary—to insure the greatest possible efficiency in America's rearmament effort.

The survey indicates, first, that an overwhelming majority think steps should be taken to insure that there will be no damaging and delaying strikes in the national defense industries.

Nearly four voters in every five (79 per cent) say that such strikes should be forbidden by the Government.

Favor More Regulation

Secondly, although the public opposes further control of industry for purposes of reform, as shown in recent Institute tests, a substantial majority favor a greater degree of Government regulation wherever it may be necessary in the interest of national defense.

The Institute survey indicates that—with the great majority of American voters—the interests of national defense far outweigh the traditional peacetime interests of both labor and business.

"Should the Government forbid strikes in industries manufacturing materials for our national defense, or should the workers in these industries continue to have the right to strike?" the Institute asked.

The replies of those with definite opinions on the question were:

Should forbid strikes	79%
Should not forbid	21

Only one person in 12 (8 per cent) said he was undecided or without an opinion.

Industry Control Backed

Previous Institute surveys have shown that the country as a whole is no longer in a mood to regulate business and industry further in the interests of New Deal "reform." To a remarkable degree, in fact, public opinion has swung over to the belief that the business point of view should be given greater weight in Washington. But where the interests of national defense are concerned, the majority still believe that further regulation and coordination may be required.

"In connection with our national defense program," the Institute asked, "do you favor increasing or decreasing Government regulation and control of industry?"

A substantial group of voters (20 per cent) declared that maximum efficiency can best be obtained by releasing business from some of the Government regulations already existing—such as the Wages and Hours Act, the Walsh-Healey Act and the Wagner Labor Act—but the national vote on the question was:

Increase Control	63%
Decrease Control	20
Make No Change	17

One voter in seven (16 per cent) said he was undecided or without a definite opinion.

Also in Upper Incomes

The public's determination to let nothing stand in the way of national defense is shown by the fact that, even among voters in the upper income groups, a slight majority favored greater regulation of industry for defense purposes, while a majority in the lower income groups approved a ban on strikes in these same industries.

The vote by income groups on the two questions was:

	Prohibit Strikes? YES	NO
Upper Income Group	83%	17%
Middle Income Group	83	17
Lower Income Group	73	27

	Control of Industry Increase.	Decrease.	No Ch.
Upper Income Group	53%	28%	20%
Middle Income Group	63	19	18
Lower Income Group	73	12	15

Willkie Bans Foreign Policy 'Deal'

Nominee Objects To Commitments In Conjunction With Administration

By the Associated Press

Colorado Springs, Aug. 9.—Wendell L. Willkie said today he had been asked by undesignated persons to make an agreement with the Roosevelt Administration on foreign policies but that he had refused to "enter into advance commitments and understandings."

In a statement handed to reporters he asserted that President Roosevelt had declined upon his election in 1932 to make any agreements with former President Hoover.

While "much doubt was expressed" as to the wisdom of Mr. Roosevelt's position, Willkie continued, "none can doubt its correctness when taken by a candidate for President."

Earlier in the day the nominee said he had "no business connections of any kind in Wall Street or any place else" and that "it is true that I will be poorer when I get out of public office."

Receives Overtures

Willkie's statement regarding overtures for an agreement on foreign policies said:

"During the course of the last couple of weeks, several persons have communicated with me, some frankly stating that they did not represent the Administration, while others left their status in doubt.

"It was suggested by some of these that it was desired that I enter into certain commitments on specific proposals concerned with the foreign policy of the United States, provided the Administration would take certain positions with reference thereto.

"On at least one occasion, there were press reports about such communications and I have just learned of another press report on the same subject.

"In order that there may be no possible misinterpretation, I want to make my position quite clear. First of all, my general views on the foreign policy and vital interests of the United States in the present international situation are well known, having been stated by me publicly several times.

Deems It Inappropriate

"As to specific executive or legislative proposals, I do not think it appropriate to enter into advance commitments and understandings.

"If the national Administration, through any of its accredited representatives, publicly takes any given position with reference to our foreign policy, I may on appropriate public occasions comment thereon."

There have been reports here that Willkie had been approached with a proposal that he indorse suggested sale of 50 or more overage United States destroyers to Britain.—Editor's note.]

Cudahy, Called Home, Tells Friends He'll Be 'Crucified'

Envoy to Belgium Rebuked by Welles For Famine Talk

Publicly reprimanded and called home by the State Department for statements praising the conduct of German troops and reflecting on the British food blockade of Europe, Ambassador John Cudahy was quoted in United Press London dispatches last night as having told friends:

"I know I am going home to be crucified, but the truth must be told."

Other news services said Cadahy had "no comment" when asked for his reaction.

Many in the Capital expected he would resign.

Cudahy, Ambassador to Belgium, gave the unauthorized interview in London while visiting Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy before returning to the United States. He had been required to leave Belgium under the German decree that diplomatic representatives quit the German-occupied portions of Europe.

Predicted Famine

He said in the interview that near-starvation conditions would prevail in Belgium in September if the United States did not get food to the Belgian people. He was quoted also as saying that German troops there had behaved better than American troops would have under similar conditions.

Tax Situation Slows Defense, Stimson Says

Leaders Urge Speed in Removing Uncertainties

By John B. Oakes
Post Staff Writer

A galaxy of top-flight officials responsible for the Nation's defense appeared before the Senate and House committees yesterday to urge speedy legislative end to tax uncertainties that have been holding up the rearmament program.

One of five stellar witnesses, Secretary of War Stimson testified that contracts have been signed for only 33 of some 4,000 planes for which Congress appropriated funds nearly seven weeks ago.

Absolving the Army, the Defense Commission and industry itself of blame in the matter, Secretary Stimson said the delay was chiefly due to the "element of uncertainty" over taxes and over allowances for amortization of new plants built for defense purposes.

Manufacturers of guns for planes, of tanks, of artillery, of ammunition "are faced with the same problems," added the War Secretary, while Assistant Secretary of the Navy Compton declared that a similar situation "presents a very serious problem to the Navy Department," particularly with regard to naval planes.

Warns on Deficit

Meeting in joint session to underline the necessity for speed, the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means committees also heard William S. Knudsen, of the Defense Commission, predict that it would be "the middle of 1944" before 2,000,000 men can be fully equipped under the present $14,702,000,000 rearmament program.

And Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau warned them that this year's deficit will amount to $5,700,000,000, while Undersecretary of the Treasury Bell observed that at the present rate of spending without new taxes, the national debt limit next year will have to be raised $9,000,000,000 above its present level of $49,000,000,000.

Yesterday's hearings presaged possible House passage next week of the bill, which has three aims: (1)

Syndicate Purchases Ten-Acre Property Of Temple Heights

A $12,000,000 commercial development at Temple Heights, Washington's last large undeveloped property near the downtown area, was promised last night by a real estate syndicate.

The syndicate has contracted to purchase the famous 10-acre tract, at Connecticut and Florida avenues, for close to $1,000,000, it was revealed yesterday.

The sale was announced by United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage, grand master of Washington Masons, who negotiated the deal. The hilly site is the property of the Grand Lodge of Masons.

Hotel, Shop Center Planned

Charles H. Bergazin, attorney for the syndicate, said yesterday that present plans call for the expenditure of $12,000,000 for the construction of a hotel, several apartment houses, a park-and-shop center, garages, a motion-picture theater and an auditorium.

The transaction, one of the largest in terms both of money and area ever made for a commercial project near the downtown area, ended the hopes of Washington's 21,000 Masons for the construction of an United Masonic temple.

The area, site of the old Dean estate, was purchased by the Masons in 1922 for a great group of buildings, each symbolic of an arm of Norse Princess Will Come to U. S.; May Live in Va.

Crown Princess Martha of Norway will sail Tuesday from Sweden aboard the liner American Legion to take refuge in this country, it was learned here yesterday. She will be accompanied by the heir to the throne, 3-year-old Prince Harald.

Although several well-known Americans have offered her the use of their homes on her arrival, it is believed the Princess prefers to be on her own, and it is possible she may lease a place in Virginia.

With her husband, Crown Prince Olaf, the princess made a tour of the United States last summer. She has been in Stockholm at the royal castle with her uncle, King Gustav, since the invasion of Norway. Her husband is in London with King Haakon.

The United States Government offered several weeks ago to put a ship at the disposal of the princess if she wished to come to this country.

Roosevelt Says National Guard Won't Have to Serve Abroad

By the Associated Press

Hyde Park, N. Y., Aug. 9.—President Roosevelt, before leaving tonight for an inspection tour of New England coastal defense units, said today the chances were 100 to 1 against the National Guard serving outside the limits of the United States or its possessions in peacetime.

Mr. Roosevelt made the observation after a reporter remarked that Senator McNary (Republican), of Oregon, Republican Vice Presidential candidate, had voted for an amendment to the training bill which would have confined guard activities to the continental United States.

The President said that a restriction such as that proposed in the amendment—which was defeated—might tie things up in an emergency. He said he understood the amendment would have permitted service in the Nation's possessions and the Philippines which is a very different thing.

Mr. Roosevelt said he did not believe National Guardsmen had ever left the United States when a state of war had not been declared with the possible exception of the punitive expedition against Pancho Villa into Mexico in 1916.

On the trip starting tonight, the President will go first to New Hampshire to visit the Portsmouth Navy Yard, then the Boston Navy

'Nighthawks' Blast Docks In Hamburg

British Again Bomb Port, Already 'Partly In Ruins;' Dromes Hit In France and Holland

By Edward W. Beattie, Jr.
United Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 9.—Britain's "nighthawks" fleet tonight reported savage bombing raids on the great German port of Hamburg and the Nazi airdrome of Cologne while home defense forces claimed an imposing victory over Adolf Hitler's blitzkrieg "feeler attack."

The air ministry said Royal Air Force bombers striking through the darkness above Germany, swept down on Hamburg, already reported "partly in ruins," and blasted docks into splinters.

Other nighthawks attacked supply depots at Hamm and Soest, vital bases supplying the German military machine.

Dutch Airports Bombed

Airdromes in France and Germany, including Cologne, were bombed heavily, the air ministry said, with many fires being started.

In a daylight raid, British bombers raked the Holland airdromes of Schipol, near Amsterdam, and Valkenburg, near Maestricht.

Other Royal Air Force planes, meanwhile, were reported carrying on extensive mine laying along the French Channel coast, which has become "a regular feature" of night operations by the British.

"These operations," the air ministry said, "are causing serious damage to enemy shipping and are dislocating German coastal traffic."

Hitler's air fleet continued raids all day long on land and sea objectives in the British Isles but defense forces were reported to have repulsed the attacks and added to a steadily increasing toll of Nazi aircraft.

Nazis Return Raids

[The Associated Press reported that more German raiders dropped bombs in the vicinity of a town in southern England early Saturday, and that tremendous explosions were heard as the missiles fell in two places ashore and at several spots just out to sea.

[The attackers earlier, said the dispatch, had veered off in the face of hot antiaircraft fire, but circled back to deposit their loads despite renewed big-scale antiaircraft and machine-gun fire from the ground.

[At other places in southeast, northeast and northwest England Saturday, German planes dropped large bombs. In a northwest England town two men were killed and several persons injured.

[From Vichy, France, the Associated Press reported that the controlled French press concluded that a mass German attack upon Britain was imminent.

[Telephone service to Switzerland from that part of France not occupied by German soldiers has been suspended since yesterday.]

Two Nazi Bombers Downed

Two German bombers were shot down after the air ministry reported that 60 Nazi planes definitely were known to have been destroyed in yesterday's furious air and sea battles. Many others severely damaged were believed never to have reached their bases, running the toll to more than 75, it was said.

[The German High Command said only ten Nazi planes were lost and claimed that 49 British planes were shot down, 28 ships sunk or damaged, and 12 balloon barrages brought down.]

In a revised statement regarding the terrific air and naval offensive against the British Isles, the air ministry claimed the Germans lost

Barricades Erected In City as Third Anniversary of Fighting Impends

By Hallett Abend
Copyright by New York Times

Shanghai, Aug. 9.—Already tense with virtual martial law, barricaded streets and triple patrols because of the imminence of the anniversary of the outbreak of fighting here three years ago, Shanghai tonight was stunned by receipt of the laconic announcement from London that the British forces in the Settlement at Shanghai, as well as British forces in North China, would be withdrawn for service elsewhere.

Neither the American, the British nor the Japanese army headquarters was prepared for this dramatic move. None of the commanders has the slightest idea as to what disposition will be made of the Settlement's defense boundaries where the Seaforth Highlanders and the East Surrey units are stationed.

This British withdrawal is regarded here as handing absolute control of Shanghai over to Japan, for certainly the 1,200 officers and men of the United States Marines stationed here, without airplanes, without tanks and without artillery, cannot seriously dispute any Japanese move to take over control of the Settlement.

Admiral in Command

[The Associated Press reported from Shanghai that withdrawal of the British places the International Settlement under the formal command of a Japanese rear admiral.

[The dispatch declared the departure of the British Maj. Gen. Frank Simons, kept there so Britain would have the ranking officer and thus direction of all foreign forces, leaves Japanese Rear Admiral Moriji Takeda as ranking officer.

[Under the international agreement, Takeda, therefore, says the dispatch, commands all the forces, so far as their disposition in the Settlement is concerned, including the United States Marines, now commanded by Col. DeWitt Peck.]

[Takeda also, the dispatch added, can station Japanese bluejackets in the British defense sector of the Settlement, or in any of the other foreign sectors.]

Italians Subservient

The French concession is already virtually Japanese dominated, while the small Italian landed force here is entirely subservient to Japanese dictation.

It is considered doubtful in Shanghai if American reinforcements will be dispatched here from Manila in order for the Americans to take over British defense sectors. Instead, it is feared that on the first "unpleasantness" between American and Japanese forces, the Americans will be forced to withdraw or fight—and no one imagines any nation today will risk war in order to maintain the integrity of Shanghai's International Settlement.

Egypt Ready To Join Forces With England

'Desert Is Terrible Enemy,' Cairo Press Warns Italians

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Egypt, Aug. 9.—Egypt, a neutral thus far in the developing desert war of the Near East, prepared tonight to join forces with the outnumbered British at the moment that Italy's African armies make their expected attack upon this ancient land.

The nation's press chorused this warning to Premier Mussolini's armies:

"The desert is a terrible enemy! It is the tomb of those who traverse it!"

An Italian invasion, the newspapers added, would end as did the first Napoleon's costly retreat on the plains of Russia.

Abdel Rahman Azzam Bey, commandant of Egypt's territorial army, declared in a speech that "any aggressive action against Egypt will cost the invader very dear," and disclosed that 200,000 men were being hurriedly trained.

Egypt is tied to Britain by a purely defensive alliance which does not require her to fight alongside the British. However, Egypt has given Britain supply and communication aids, has broken off diplomatic relations with both Germany and Italy and has warned Italy that she would fight if she is invaded, or her cities are bombed.

District Crash Hurls Elderly Couple 30 Feet, Killing Woman

An elderly woman was killed and her husband seriously injured here last night when they were thrown 30 feet by the impact of a two-car collision at Fourth and E streets southeast.

Mrs. Lillian F. Goodhart, 68, of 1214 H street northwest, is the fatality victim. Fred B. Goodhart, 66, connected with a printing firm here, was in serious condition at Casualty Hospital, suffering from head and spine injuries.

According to police, Goodhart's car collided with one driven by Charles E. Wright, 20, of 218 C street southeast. Wright was taken to Gallinger Hospital to be treated for shock. He is being held for action of the coroner.

Mrs. Goodhart's death brou[illegible] the year's total to 43. Traffic has taken 50 lives at this time last year.

More severely hurt was Charles McDade, 13, colored, of 680[illegible] Grant street northwest, also hit near his home. He was taken to Casualty Hospital with lacerations to the head. Police listed the driver as John W. Manigaulte, 30, colored, of 68 Quincy street northwest.

Over Our Shoulder

In The Draft

"I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier," say the letters passing across Congressional desks. But letters can be inspired by pressure groups. Are these? One way to tell is to check with the sentiment of the country as revealed by Sunday's Gallup Poll.

In Sunday's Post you'll find the vote—State by State—for and against conscription.

While pondering conscription, the Senate passed the bill permitting the calling out of the National Guard. Hedley Donovan's Sunday Post article reviews developments all along the line—Guard, Reserves and especially conscription.

What would happen should there be a general mobilization? Three books on the subject—"M-Day," "Mobilizing Civilian America" and "M-Day and What It Means to You"—are reviewed on the Sunday book page by Capt. Donald C. Bingham, U. S. N. (retired).

A touch of humor to enliven a grim subject: don't miss Sunday's "Gentler Sex" in which Malvina Lindsay gives you "The Amazons."

People

Sunday's Post feature articles is crammed with about interesting people. Take

Lindbergh, for example. Whether hero or the opposite to you, certainly he's interesting. Felix Morley contributes an article in which he analyzes the five Lindbergh radio speeches and reaches some conclusions for both the hero worshipers and the haters to ponder.

Washington has its own "bring 'em back alive" expert in the person of Dr. Mann, who just returned from Liberia with a cargo of new animals for our Zoo. Gerald Gross' Sunday article gives you the story of this Smithsonian-Firestone expedition.

Not since Walter Johnson came up from Idaho has a Washington ball player made so big a jump—successfully—as Sid Hudson. Shirley Povich dusts off his Florida training camp column about the then bush leaguer and brings you up to date on the major league find of the year.

Personalities are Hollywood's bread and butter and don't the Hollywood writers know it! So in Sunday's Post you'll find stories about Director Robert Leonard; about Judy Garland and the cement fingernails—Betty Grable and the loving cup — Carole Landis and the publicity that backfired—Vivien Leigh and the anniversary cake.

Movie fans: We commend you to Mesdames Parsons, Hopper and Neville.

If you are one of W[illegible]ington's 7,000 Legionnaires, you'll want to meet your new Department Commander, William H. Hargrave. There's a story about him on Sunday's page devoted to veterans and organizations—his background, his plans for Washington's Legion.

Besides finding space [illegible] on Mr. Hudson, Mr. Mil[illegible] a page devoted to the Reds, plus the first stirrings of co[illegible]tball, Sunday's sports sec[illegible] introduces a new feature—letters to the sports editor. Read it. Write to it. It's your baby.

Letters are nothing new to Mary Haworth, but the one she answers this Sunday is one of the most interesting to appear for a long time. D. C. Guard Hit By Discharge Bill

Resignations by Men With Dependents Would Take 20%

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

Rensselaer Falls, N. Y., Aug. 9.—District, Virginia and Maryland National Guard regiments are threatened with loss of approximately 20 per cent of their men if Congress decides to permits men with dependents to resign, ranking officers of the Twenty-ninth Division estimated today.

Though only one commander felt a large part of his organization might take advantage of the opportunity, all agreed the outstanding loss would be among their most valuable men, particularly noncommissioned officers. Many officers felt also that a most injurious effect would be that upon the morale of the men who remained when they might have applied for discharge.

Among the men themselves there appeared to be a tendency to complete a year's service now, with seniority accumulated and promotion in sight, rather than wait to be drafted and start again from the bottom.

Had Signed Affidavits

Lieut. Col. Peyton G. Nevitt, assistant adjutant general of the District National Guard, estimated that about 20 per cent of District Guardsmen would come under provisions of the discharge amendment. On the other hand, he pointed out that for the last ten years or so, all District Guard recruits have been required to produce affidavits from their families that their support is not needed at home.

"Our most serious loss," he said, "would be among our noncoms, more than half of whom are married. Many of them have 10 or 15 years service behind them and their loss would be a serious handicap to training new men."

He said loss among commissioned officers would be comparatively light except in unusual cases where, to prevent collapse of a business firm or for some similar reason, one might resign.

Welcomes Provision

Another District Guard officer, Col. Walter W. Burns, commanding the 260th Coast Artillery, the District's largest regiment, rather welcomed the discharge provision. "It wouldn't affect more than 5 per cent of our men," he declared. "We already have discharged most of those with dependents and we haven't enlisted any with dependants in more than a year, though some of those have acquired dependents since.

"With this amendment in force we can begin to get rid of some of our deadwood."

Col. John F. Bright, commanding the Ninety-first Brigade of Virginia Guardsmen, in the absence of Brig. Gen. S. Gardner Waller, declared his two regiments might suffer 50 per cent losses by discharge among their most valuable men.

"In my opinion," said Col. Bright, who is Mayor of Richmond, "the amendment will deprive this brigade of nearly half of its key personnel. The amendment will increase greatly the difficulties of training because it will tend to deprive us of irreplaceable noncommissioned officers shortly after induction. The amendment also will tend to disrupt morale both at home and in camp."

May Keep Key Men

The Ninety-first Brigade, composed of the First Infantry from Richmond and Eastern Virginia and the 116th Infantry from Lynchburg and the west, includes the majority of Virginia Guardsmen.

Ranking officers in the Maryland Guard and in the personnel section of the Twenty-ninth Division, said the division as a whole would stand to lose 10 to 20 per cent of its best trained men. Some of them seemed to feel, though, that the Army would be privileged to decide if valuable men could not be retained in spite of their requests for discharge if their dependents were provided with suitable allotments.

The case of enlisted men with excellent jobs in civil life seemed to pose a separate problem for which no one could offer a solution. The discharge clause, all observers felt, would give employers a perfect excuse for not rehiring men who might have applied for discharge, but declined, out of patriotism or for any other reason, to do so.

Several Colorado Officers Resign

Several officers in Colorado's National Guard Aviation Squadron have resigned because of the likelihood of extended active duty, Adjt. Gen. H. H. Richardson said in Washington yesterday, but "that won't keep us from going ahead just as we are."

Richardson flew here from Denver to discuss the problem with the War Department's National Guard Bureau. The Colorado Squadron has lost two men already, and Richardson said he had several more resignations which he had not accepted yet.

La. Lumberman Building U. S. 'Mosquito Fleet'

New Orleans, La., Aug. 9 (AP).—A man who started building boats because nobody else could make them to do his tough assignments is building a little fleet now for the biggest job of all—defending the United States.

The plant operated by Andrew J. Higgins, on one of New Orleans' main streets a mile from the waterfront, is creating a "mosquito fleet" of swift, deadly torpedo boats reportedly roughly designed by President Roosevelt himself.

In the lumber business in Louisiana, Higgins found he needed boats to go after logs in shallow bayous, filled with debris or water hyacinths. He specialized in craft with hulls so constructed they would hurdle small sandbars, run unscathed over floating logs, plow through mud and plunge head-on upon a bank or seawall that afforded no easy landing. When Uncle Sam needed boats for defense, Higgins was ready for the job.

Higgins will disclose no details regarding the craft. However, he has completed at least two torpedo boats and the Navy has awarded him a contract of nearly $1,000,000 for "construction of an undisclosed number of small boats."

The craft are reported to be about 81 feet long, with a possible speed of 60 miles per hour, carrying equipment for firing torpedoes, dropping depth bombs and laying smoke screens, as well as armor-piercing, antiaircraft and machine guns.

Drum Invites Roosevelt To Maneuvers

By a Staff Correspondent

Fort Ontario, N. Y., Aug. 9.—President Roosevelt has been invited to visit the United States First Army in the field by Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, its commander, it was learned here today.

The date contemplated for the President's visit is understood to be August 17. Tentative plans call for suspension of all training activities for the day and forming the more than 100,000 troops in the maneuver area in their division camps for review by Mr. Roosevelt. It was understood that the invitation had not yet been accepted.

The District's 260th Coast Artillery fired at targets all day with 3-inch and .50-caliber guns. Near Rensselaer Falls and Heuvelton, officers and men of District, Virginia and Maryland units of the Twenty-ninth Division sweated under a broiling sun in training battalions and smaller commands in preparation for the huge mimic war scheduled to start August 19. Guardsmen of the Twenty-ninth will be part of the Blue Army, consisting of the Second and Third Corps, defending the United States against a Black invader, represented by the First Corps.

Health throughout the division remained good, some 80 officers and men of the 104th Medical Regiment having recovered completely from a case of poisoning contracted from food purchased on the way up from Washington.

Visiting Col. Walter W. Burns, commander of the 260th, here today was Brig. Gen. William Ottmann of the New York National Guard and his staff, who observed the regiment's fire at towed targets. Gen. Ottmann will command the Provision Antiaircraft Brigade during maneuvers, consisting of the 260th, the 169th (Delaware National Guard) and the Sixty-second (Regular) Coast Artillery Regiments.

Fire of both 3-inch and machine guns were directed by new height finders and range finders in use by a few antiaircraft regiments in the Army. These control aim of the gunners by accurately spotting the target and transmitting data by electricity to dials on the guns which are followed by the gunners.

The regiment is scheduled to leave tomorrow for Richville, just north of Gouverneur, where it will go into camp to protect units of the Third Corps from attack by Black planes.

At Richville, the regiment will be spread over a large area, its batteries and machinegun sections emplaced miles from headquarters, the regiment communicating by telephone.

The division will be under direction of its commander, Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord. It has not been assembled since it served a year ago on the historic Battlefield of Manassas.

The First Battalion, 104th Quartermaster Regiment, today received three new officers to bring it to war strength. They are Lieut. Kenneth R. Monroe, assigned to Company A; Lieut. George E. Miley, Company B, and Lieut. Norval B. Smith, Headquarters Company.

Army Piqued as Plans Leak Out on New Monster Tanks

By the Associated Press

The Army maintained strict secrecy last night regarding the details of a new monster tank which is to go into production shortly at the Baldwin Locomotive Works in Philadelphia.

Officials evidently felt that any information regarding the design of the "land battleship" might prove of value to some foreign nations.

They were displeased by the fact that news of the $5,689,725 contract with Baldwin for production of an undisclosed number of the tanks had slipped out in a routine list of contract clearings made public by the National Defense Commission.

The secrecy recalled to some veteran officers that which was maintained in England when the first World War tanks were under construction. Parts for the new war machines were labeled simply "for a tank," giving the impression that they were to be part of a container for some kind of liquid. This device of concealment was so widely used that when it came time to name the new product it was called a tank.

It was assumed that the Army's new heavy tanks would resemble the 70-ton giants which have been credited with playing an important part in the German break-through of Belgian and French defenses.

The United States Army is already building light tanks of around 12 tons each and medium tanks of nearly 20 tons, but it has hestitated in the past to build huge land battlewagons of 50 tons or more. One of the reasons for this hesitancy was that many highway bridges in the United States would not support such weights.

However, defense commission officials have said steps are being taken to strengthen 2,000 bridges on strategic highways.

Don't Come To D. C., Job Hunters Told

Civil Service Aide Issues Plea In Radio Broadcast

Defense job seekers were advised to stay away from Washington last night in a radio appeal from Civil Service Commission officials.

W. A. McCoy, chief of the commission's examining division, said that workers seeking Government jobs should stay away from Washington "unless they are sent for."

Seven out of eight Federal jobs, said McCoy, are outside the District and he added that his organization is trying to place workers in new jobs as near as possible to their home communities.

Harry B. Mitchell, commission president, said that 100,000 men are needed in a minimum of time "to perform work as vital to the welfare of the United States as the work of our armed forces."

In recruiting these men, he said, the commission is working with the Navy and War Departments on a 24-hour basis.

The recruiting program, Mitchell said, was planned so as to avoid interference with the work of private industries engaged in national defense activities. He added that the commission does not want skilled workmen to leave private jobs in defense industries for Government employment.

Political Arena

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 9.—Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, cochairman of the United Jewish Appeal and vice president of the Zionist Organization of America, has indorsed the candidacy of Wendell L. Willkie, Republican candidate for President. In a statement made here yesterday he attacked the renomination of President Roosevelt as unnecessary violation of "the no-third-term tradition."

DR. SILVER

"The 'no third-term' tradition has been vindicated by a century and a half of American experience, and it is particularly important in these days, when the indispensable one-man rule is exalted in so many parts of the world at the expense of the democratic faith in laws and institutions, rather than in person, that it should not be repudiated.

"Only one consideration would have warranted a change of attitude—if the opposition candidate, in this case Mr. Willkie, would have been an isolationist, representing a foreign policy at sharp variance with the sound and courageous one which President Roosevelt has been prosecuting."

"Fortunately, Mr. Willkie has expressed himself clearly and unequivocally in favoring maximum aid, short of war, to Great Britain."

The Senate Campaign Expenditures Investigating Committee yesterday invited C. B. Tuttle, vice president and treasurer of the S. S. Kresge Co., to appear and explain a letter which he sent to company employes in Detroit urging contributions to the Republican campaign chest.

Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, had complained formally that the letter involved coercion of employes, charging on the Senate floor that the letter would eventually go to some 30,000 company employes in 3,000 stores.

Tuttle said his letter was not a "touch" and he explained in Detroit that it was sent only to store managers and other officials and not to clerks, as Byrnes had charged.

"We want to know all of the facts and to what extent this method of soliciting funds is being used," Chairman Gillette (Democrat), Iowa, of the Expenditures Committee, said explaining his invitation to Tuttle.

The Congressional Record, chronicle of the proceedings of Congress, blossomed out today in what might be called a Jim Farley edition. Forty and one-half pages of the 108-page issue are devoted to laudatory editorials and articles from newspapers praising the retiring Democratic National Committee chairman and Postmaster General.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, on behalf of his colleague, Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, who placed Farley's name before the Chicago convention for the Democratic Presidential nomination, secured unanimous consent of the Senate to insert the 175 newspaper clippings in the Record.

Jury Will Probe 'Family Argument' Death Case Today

A coroner's jury this morning will investigate the death of Thilo Loeffler, 52, 950 F street southwest, who died at Casualty Hospital at 2:45 a. m. yesterday from injuries allegedly received in an altercation with his son-in-law, Lawrence P. Merriman, 23, of 919 F street southwest.

Loeffler was taken to the hospital August 3 after, police said, he was struck on the jaw and knocked to the sidewalk in front of Merriman's home. Merriman at the same time was taken to Emergency Hospital for treatment of a knife wound on his neck. His condition was not serious and he was released.

Police took Merriman into custody yesterday. Detective Sergt. Aubrey M. Tolson, homicide squad, said the men became involved in a "family" argument and that Merriman apparently acted in self defense after being cut.

Sheppard Urges Draft as Reply To Axis Threat of Invasion

Wheeler Assails His Prediction Victorious Reich Would Invade U.S.

Sheppard's assertion that conscription is the only method of meeting Army manpower needs with the essential speed, said the Army has been notably successful in meeting recent quotas for voluntary enlistment and demanded:

"Why is it automatically assumed that the voluntary system would fail now?"

He said William S. Knudsen had testified yesterday before a joint meeting of the Senate Finance and House Ways and Means committees that full equipment for an Army of 750,000 will not be available until 1942.

Danaher Demands "Evidence"

With the Army's authorized strength now set at 375,000 and the Senate granting the President power to call 375,000 guardsmen and Reserves to the colors, a force of 750,000 men is "already in sight," Vandenberg said.

"Why is it necessary," he asked, "to resort to extraordinary peacetime methods to obtain more men than the Army can use for another two years?"

Danaher asked Sheppard, "Just what is the nature of this immediate emergency that requires conscription? Can you give us the evidence?"

"There doesn't have to be any evidence brought in here," Sheppard snapped. The galleries applauded his declaration that the emergency is "the onslaught of dictatorships against democracies everywhere in the world."

When Danaher asked from what nation an attack on the Western Hemisphere was feared, Sheppard replied, "From Germany, chiefly."

Fears Invasion of Alaska

Senator Holman (Republican), of Oregon, stirred brief excitement by advising his colleagues:

"I can assure the Senate that I have learned on the highest military authority of an imminent danger of invasion of Alaska from the Pacific."

Holman later told reporters that, so far as he knew, "no one is mobilizing their forces now."

Danaher maneuvered Sheppard into a position of opposition to the proposed transfer of 50 American destroyers to Britain, after the chairman of the Military Committee had asserted that the United States is menaced in both oceans but must keep the body of its fleet in the Pacific.

"Then the Navy needs all the ships it has?" Danaher asked.

"We need twice that many," Sheppard replied.

"Then we couldn't even spare 50, could we?" the young Connecticut Senator swiftly inquired. A threat from the chair to remove all spectators from the chamber cut short a wave of applause and laughter.

Indorses Green Statement

Senator Johnson, of California, rose early in the debate to indorse a statement by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, opposing conscription. "The American way should be tried first," Johnson said.

He went on to express fears that backers of the draft bill would try "to ram it down our throats after very brief consideration, telling us we must come to a vote at four minutes to 1 or three minutes after 2."

Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, one of the few men still in Congress who voted against America's entry into the World War, said the provisions of the Burke-Wadsworth bill for rehiring of trainees after return to civilian life "will deceive soldiers into thinking Congress is doing something for them that it really lacks the power to do."

The resentment of returning soldiers who find that Congressional guarantees did not save their jobs "would live on for 50 years among these men and their families," Norris warned.

Senator Burke, coauthor of the conscription bill, yesterday served notice that he will try to amend the measure to make all men between the ages of 21 and 44 subject to the draft.

First Marine Brigade Quits Quantico for Cuba War Games

Shift Is Preliminary to Extensive Winter Maneuvers in Caribbean Area for Defense Of Hemisphere, Says Navy Department

The First Marine Brigade is being moved from its Quantico (Va.) base to Guantanamo, Cuba, for intensive training maneuvers, the Navy announced last night.

GEN. LITTLE

The brigade consists of 2,900 officers and men. The departure date was not revealed. Maj. Gen. Louis McCarty Little is commanding officer of the base.

The transfer, the announcement said, is preliminary to extensive winter maneuvers in the Caribbean area, stemming from the huge United States naval base in Guantanamo Bay.

Guantanamo was chosen, the department said, "as features of terrain and other facilities essential for this training are available at that station."

Reports that the marine force in the Caribbean would be augmented began circulating in July after the United States bluntly warned Germany that any attempt to transfer foreign possessions in this hemisphere from one foreign power to another, would be considered a violation of the Monroe Doctrine.

Specifically in mind were French and Dutch possessions whose status was left in doubt when the Netherlands and France capitulated to Germany.

Germany replied to the American note by denying it has any territorial ambitions in the New World and announcing in effect that she will stay out of Latin America if the United States follows a similar policy with regard to Europe.

The recent Inter-American Conference at Havana unanimously adopted a resolution supporting the United States stand and providing that provisional administrations will be established by one or more of the American nations over any possessions thus menaced.

In Washington the Navy Department is organizing highly mobile marine units knowns as "fire brigades," which would be quickly dispatched to trouble centers anywhere in the hemisphere.

Several destroyers are being especially equipped to transport the brigades.

Big Air Base Planned On Hawaiian Islands

Gen. Stone to Retire August 31 at 64

The War Department announced yesterday that Gen. David L. Stone, until recently commander of the Fifth Corps Area with headquarters at Columbus, Ohio, would retire from active service on August 31, because he had reached the retirement age of 64.

Gen. Stone was born in Stoneville, Miss. For service in the World War he received the Distinguished Service Medal of the United States, the Croix de Guerre and the Decoration of the Legion of Honor of France, and Belgium's decoration of the Order of Leopold. He also was decorated for gallantry in action during the Philippine Insurrection.

Union Heads to Probe Bendix Plant Slow-Down

Detroit, Aug. 9 (AP).—Richard T. Frankensteen, and Richard T. Leonard, regional directors of the United Automobile Workers (C. I. O.), were sent to South Bend, today by the union to investigate reports of a "slow-down" demonstration at the Bendix Aviation Corporation plant.

George F. Addes, U. A. W.-C. I. O., secretary-treasurer, acting as president in the absence of R. J. Thomas, said the international officials would not tolerate such an interference with production.

James F. Dewey, Federal conciliator, also was on his way from Detroit to South Bend to seek a solution of the difficulty.

Economic 5th Column Held Defense Peril

Nazis Control War Industry Patents, U. S. Juries Find

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 9.—An "economic fifth column," Assistant United States Attorney General Thurman Arnold declared today, has placed many businessmen engaged in America's vital defense industries "in the impossible position of divided loyalties."

"This is not a malicious fifth column and must not be attributed to espionage," Arnold said, adding that "no moral issues are involved, but merely the enforcement of law."

He explained that evidence of German control of patents important to the war industries of the United States had been uncovered by Federal grand juries operating in New York and other key cities, investigating production restriction and price fixing.

Juries Ready to Indict

Declining to give specific instances of German patent control, Arnold said that it must be attributed to normal business trends.

Here to take temporary charge of the inquiry started by his assistant, Samuel S. Isseks, Arnold said that Federal juries now sitting in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles San Francisco, Seattle, St. Louis and other key centers were being used as "a fluid system to handle the emergency."

The juries, he said, were prepared to return indictments wherever they found production restriction or price fixing in industries affecting the country's armament program, and to investigate antitrust law violations occurring in the food, fuel, housing, drug or other vital industries.

Guards Against Price-Fixing

Arnold cited the World War price of potash—$400 a ton—as an example of "production restriction and price-fixing" against which he said the Government intends to guard at this time.

"It is easy to see how such monopolies of production and prices are sapping the life out of the country," he added, explaining that establishment of a competitive system in all fields would tend toward lower prices.

Employers Face Court for Laxity On Wage Claims

A number of District employers will be called into Small Claims Court next week to answer contempt citations for failure to satisfy judgments for wage claims, Judge Armond W. Scott announced yesterday.

Wage claims by employes receive preference under the small claims law, Judge Scott pointed out, and when a judgment is rendered, the claim against an employer is payable immediately. He added that the court would not "trifle" with defaulting employers.

10,000 Homeless In Record Floods

Red Cross and U. S. Agencies Expedite Aid to Louisiana

By the Associated Press

Crowley, La., Aug. 9.—Red Cross, State and Federal agencies hurriedly mobilized their forces today to administer emergency aid to 10,000 refugees driven from their homes in Southwest Louisiana by two days of torrential rain which natives said surpassed the landmark flood of 1927.

Answering urgent appeals from Mayor Matt Buatt, of Crowley, in the center of the flood area, Gov. Sam Jones at Baton Rouge swung into action to administer available aid.

The Governor, in a late afternoon radio broadcast, described the situation as "most serious" and declared that "everything possible is being done" to rush aid to the stricken thousands.

Jones estimated that there were 10,000 persons homeless and in need of immediate supplies, declaring that most of them were "cut off from the outside world."

He appealed for food, clothing, bedding, medicine and boats to send into the disaster area, particularly to Crowley where the brunt of the floods centered following the Gulf of Mexico hurricane which swept along the Louisiana coast into Texas two days ago.

The mobilization of relief forces got into full swing as an abatement came today in the 18 and 19-inch rains and the winds which whipped up abnormally high coastal tides died down.

Both Crowley and her sister city, Lafayette, similarly stricken, reported the rains let up during the day after flooding the city streets from a few inches to 10 feet deep.

Business was paralyzed, highway traffic was flooded out, with transportation limited to boats or main line railroads.

U. S. Employe Leaps to Death In Potomac

Harbor police last night dragged the rapids of the Potomac River below Chain Bridge for the body of Arthur H. Bartelt, 43, a General Accounting Office accountant, who leaped from the span about 12:20 p. m. yesterday.

Bartelt's automobile was parked about 100 feet north of the Virginia end of the bridge. He left a note addressed to his brother, Edward F. Bartelt, 3017 Stephenson place northwest, commissioner of accounts and deposits, Treasury Department.

Two fishermen, Vernon Goultrie, of Alexandria, Va., and Posey Price, 419 Second street northeast, told police they saw the man hurl himself over the rail on the upstream side of the bridge. He was screaming when he struck the water, they said.

Tells of Hearing Scream

Another witness, Louis St. George, of Chain Bridge, Va., employed at a filling station on the Virginia shore, said he heard a scream and saw the man's body in the current. He was waving his arms, St. George stated.

Witnesses said Bartelt was swept about 75 feet downstream before he disappeared from sight.

Harbor Police were hampered in their efforts to recover the body by a strong current.

The drowned man's brother went to police headquarters and talked with Capt. Ira E. Keck, assistant chief of detectives, and Detective Sergt. Aubrey M. Tolson.

The police said afterward that he was unable to give any reason for his brother's action.

Could Give No Reason

No reason was stated in the note, it was said, which requested that Edward Bartelt look after his estate and ship his body to Illinois for burial.

A World War veteran, Bartelt lived at 1424 R street northwest. He was married but had been separated from his wife for about two years, police said they were told.

Bartelt obtained leave of absence from his work yesterday morning, his associates said.

Helen Traubel, Who Is Proud Of U. S. Debut, Here Tomorrow

She Is Proof Singer Can Succeed Without European Start

Helen Traubel, soprano, who sings at the Watergate tomorrow night, did not go to Europe for her debut and is proud of the fact.

She came up the hard way in her field, in America, watched her chances—then made her debut among the people she will sing before in her now full-fledged career. She thinks it is best.

Miss Traubel thinks any singeer—if he is good—can succeed likewise in America, provided he diligently prepares and watches his opportunities, even making opportuinties when necessary.

Then, when such a singer is ready to be accepted, he will be, she strongly believes.

By way of personality, Miss Traubel is as easy to know and to talk with as the lady who calls at your house of evenings from across the street.

She likes to talk about the weather or any other everyday thing. She laughs easily at little jokes and says nothing about music until pressed. She said she was "really thrilled" at the prospect of singing here at the Water Gate, an environment that appeals to her, and she wants to see all the public buildings and maybe the Congressman from her Missouri district.

Born in St. Louis, Miss Traubel's mother was a concert singer. Her professional debut was made as guest soloist with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, under Rudolph Ganz. Her way led to the Metropolitan Opera Company. Her greatest acclaim has been in Wagnerian roles.

Her offerings tomorrow night will include "There is No Death" (O'Hara); "Deep River" (Burleigh); "Daybreak" (McDonald); "Two Hebriac Poems" (McDonald), and "Cordoba" (Albeniz-O'Connell).

Commissioners Accept New Budget Plan

The District Commissioners yesterday accepted and expressed "profound appreciation" of the Budget Bureau's plan to leave primary responsibility for the annual budget estimates with the municipal heads.

In a letter to Harold D. Smith, director of the Federal Budget Bureau, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen said his board "have always felt that as the executive head of the municipal government the responsibility for the determination of the items that shall be included in the annual budgets of the District as submitted to Congress rests with the Commissioners."

Union Protests Making Of Shoes in Prison

Frank McGrath, United Shoe Workers president, yesterday protested against the proposed order for 300,000 pairs of shoes to be made by convict labor at Leavenworth Prison for CCC boys.

"The shoe workers of this country can ill-afford any loss from their present inadequate average income of $880 a year," McGrath said at headquarters here.

SEC Speeds Probe of Banks' Utility Control

Six N. Y. Firms Denied Bill of Particulars And Delay in Hearing

In its first proceeding against banking firms for allegedly controlling a utility holding company, the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday ordered full speed ahead in an investigation to determine whether six New York concerns dominate policies of the Standard Power & Light Corporation.

The SEC refused specifically to grant a bill of particulars that had been requested by the six firms—Blair & Co., Inc.; Schroder, Rockefeller & Co., Inc.; Emanuel & Co.; A. C. Allyn & Co., Inc.; W. C. Langley, Inc., and Granbery, Marache & Lord.

Denying to furnish the recital of charges, the SEC told the firms they had had plenty of time to request the bill of particulars at an earlier date. The commission reproached the bankers for waiting until the date of the hearing, August 5, to ask for the evidence, reminding them they had been notified more than two months ago.

The SEC is holding hearings on alleged banker-control of Standard Power & Light to determine if the control is so great that the six firms should register under the Utility Holding Company Act and thus become subject to the obligations, duties and liabilities imposed by the law on holding companies.

The commission said that on the date of the hearing the firms, with one exception, asked SEC to tell them what the evidence against them show respecting the phases of tSandard's affairs they allegedly controlled, the persons through whom the control was allegedly maintained, and the nature of the alleged control.

The commission, refusing to grant the bill of particulars, said the firms had been amply notified of the purpose of the hearing.

Accordingly, full speed ahead was ordered on the hearings, which might result in precedent-shattering order by the commission that banking firms comply with the Utility Holding Company Act.

Rep. Randolph May Drop Police Residence Bill

A bill which Chairman Jennings Randolph of the House District Committee was planning to report to the House on Monday probably will be withdrawn as the result of an adverse letter from the District Building yesterday.

The measure would permit local policemen and firemen to reside outside the District as far as 12 miles beyond the city limits. At present they are required to live within a 12-mile radius of the Capitol.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen wrote Randolph the proposed relaxing of the residence law would permit policemen and firemen to make their homes as far as 20 to 25 miles from the Capitol. This would not be desirable, he said, because the Capitol is a strategic assembly point in event of emergency and, in addition, lengthening of the residence radius would complicate the duties of police and fire surgeons making sick calls.

Hazen said the bill was opposed by Police Chief Ernest W. Brown and Fire Chief Stephen Porter, as well as by all three members of the Board of Commissioners.

Hastings' Books May Be Probed In Trust Case

Former Delaware Senator Involved In Alleged Bribery

By the Associated Press

Senator Tobey (Republican), New Hampshire, demanded yesterday that former Senator Daniel O. Hastings, of Delaware, produce his checking and law account books before a Senate committee inquiring into postponement of a Government antitrust suit in a Delaware Federal Court in 1932.

Tobey, a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, demanded that the 1932 and 1933 books be produced next Tuesday.

Hastings, who testified he received a total of $7,500 from the Radio Corporation of America for his services when the suit was pending, assured Tobey he would produce the books if they still exist.

Earlier Hastings declared the testimony of his former law partner, C. Edward Duffy, Wilmington, Del., that Hastings had said he "had to pay the Federal court clerk $2,500 to get the continuance" was "absolutely false." Duffy told the committee Thursday that the clerk to whom Hastings referred was Henry C. Mahaffy, jr., of the Federal court at Wilmington, Del.

The former Senator testified under oath the testimony was part of an effort to "smear" him and a Federal judge.

Mahaffy denied Thursday ever having received any money from "RCA or anyone else." Prior to that, Edward O. Keller, Washington real estate man, testified an RCA attorney, Robert D. O'Callaghan, had told him Mahaffy was paid $15,000.

Referring to "stories about Mahaffy being bribed," Hastings declared:

"You can't bribe a man to do something he has no authority to do. You might buy his influence if he had any—and you can't do that in that court."

Stimson Pleads For Tax Changes

suspension of profit limitations on arms contracts; (2) permission to industries to write off in five years plant expansion necessitated by defense needs, and (3) levying of an excess-profits tax.

Asserting that rapid decision on these questions is "a matter of vital importance to the national defense," Secretary Stimson declared that as the War Department "must depend upon private industry for the production of the planes that it needs today and tomorrow . . . it must attend to the legitimate needs of that industry."

"I have received no evidence that at any time there has been any tendency on the part of industry to hold back on the Army in these negotiations," said Secretary Stimson, asking "special consideration" of the risk to industry of expanding plant facilities and "of then being left, upon a sudden cessation of the emergency, with these expanded facilities useless."

On the other hand, Assistant Secretary Compton asked for repeal instead of suspension of profit limitations because, for example, subcontractors on one $10,000,000 naval gun contract "absolutely refused to accept" orders under the present restriction of maximum profit to 8 per cent.

"There was another case of an aircraft firm who bid on the (former) 12 per cent profit basis and before the award was made, the legal profit was reduced to 8 per cent," Compton declared. "The result was that the subcontractors refused the business on the basis that it was not attractive to them under those conditions. This was a case where the rules of the game were changed while the game was in process."

Favors Liberal Amortization

Uncertainty as to the amortization period for plant expansion has held up the aircraft expansion program, said the Assistant Secretary. He recommended that the liberal amortization terms of the pending bill be applied to all expansion for national defense, and not merely to that which has taken place since July 10, as the bill now provides.

He cited one case where construction of a new armor plant has been delayed "for the past month" because the manufacturer "has been unwilling to proceed until he definitely knows what rate of amortization can be applied."

In another instance, said the witness, the $18,000,000 expansion of an aircraft motor plant, in order to double its capacity to 1,400 engines a month, has been delayed for the same reason.

The Navy already has under contract approximately $1,250,000,000 in ships, aircraft, ordnance and public works, said the Assistant Secretary, adding that this advance has been made possible only because in some cases industry has been willing "to finance its own plant expansion and take a chance" on amortization. In other cases the Government has financed the new facilities 100 per cent, he said.

Would Expedite Program

"No single act would be more beneficial in expediting our program than the clarification of the present situation through the early enactment of an excess profits tax," Compton declared.

Knudsen, of Danish birth, told the joint committee that the entire Army defense program can be completed in about four years.

A question that obviously aroused keen interest among several members of the two committees was put by Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, who complained that "less than 1 per cent" of the new plants for defense purposes were being built in "the 22 States between the Mississippi and the Rockies."

tones that a survey of the country for tones that a survy of the country for the best locations for defense industries took time, Representative McCormack (Democrat), of Massachusetts, provoked a burst of laughter when he remarked with a grin:

"Speak a little louder, Mr. Knudsen; this is a very practical question."

In answer to a direct query, Knudsen said he indorsed the principle of the excess profits levy, as the cost of rearmament "has to be paid."

Advocating "early passage of this urgently needed legislation," Secretary Morgenthau testified that "a barrier of uncertainty" has arisen in the minds of contractors who want Government business, and they therefore "have been hesitant" to make contracts.

Federal, Airlines Officials Question Hostess on Slugging

NARRATES FROM HOSPITAL BED—Rosemary Griffith, airline stewardess, from her hospital bed in Nashville, Tenn., yesterday told newsmen her version of being slugged and how she swallowed the key to luggage compartment of plane while in the air Wednesday night. Postal authorities announced the case closed, but did not report their findings

Rosemary Griffith Denies Newspaper Report She Had Quarreled With Co-Pilot Friend; Repeats Her Story for Newsmen

By the Associated Press

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 9.—Rosemary Griffith repeated to newsmen today her previously announced story of having been slugged on an airliner en route to Nashville Wednesday night and swallowing the key to the mail and baggage compartment which an unseen assailant had demanded.

She was given permission to leave the hospital shortly before midnight, and made reservations on a plane scheduled to leave at 2:06 a. m. (E. S. T.) tomorrow, for New York.

The blonde 24-year-old American Airlines hostess was interviewed in her hospital room after she had talked with a Civil Aeronautics Authority inspector, a postal inspector, a deputy U. S. marshal and an airlines attorney.

What she told the others was not disclosed, but to reporters she reiterated the story which Paul Stanley, Nashville sales representative of the airlines, said yesterday she had told him.

Later, referring to statements in a local newspaper story, she said W. C. Jakeman, a co-pilot for American Airlines who visited her here last night and was with her when she was first interviewed by newsmen today, had driven her to the airport when she left New York Wednesday night but that it was not true, as the published account stated, that they had quarreled.

She also denied having said before taking off that she had a premonition something was going to happen on the flight.

Physicians said her progress had been satisfactory and she probably could leave the hospital in another day.

Before the newsmen were admitted an airlines official said that the company's official investigation was concluded and the stewardess was free to talk as she chose.

Waldman Resigns From Labor Party

New York, Aug. 9 (INS).—Louis Waldman, one of the Nation's best known labor attorneys, today announced his resignation from the American Labor Party, charging it was coming under Communist control.

In a lengthy letter to Eli L. Oliver, new State executive director of the party, Waldman said he would support President Roosevelt in the forthcoming election. But, he said, he would not "allow my support of the President to be used as an excuse for giving Communists a respectable front in the form of the American Labor Party.

Dynamite-Laden Trunk Found Near War Relief Headquarters

Boy, 12, Discovers Explosives Consigned To D. C. Incinerator

A small boy's interest in what he thought was "fishing tackle" yesterday prevented a trash disposal company from hurling into the flames of the District incinerator a mysterious, dynamite-laden trunk.

Three sticks and 75 caps of the explosive were discovered in the nick of time in the battered trunk on the rear of an abandoned truck in a lot adjoining 2017 P street northwest.

The lot which is now rented by J. Fairfax Conrad, as the center of a trash disposal company, is in the rear of the Walsh Mansion, 2020 Massachusetts avenue northwest, roll call headquarters of the District Red Cross where volunteer workers are now making surgical dressings for British relief. The same building is also the home of the Washington branch of the Finnish Relief Fund, Inc.

Lay in Lot Two Years

Conrad said that the truck had lain out of commission in the lot for at least two years. The apparently worthless trunk had been placed on the machine about a year ago, he recalled, after having been collected by one of the company's other trucks on the course of its rounds of Washington, hotels and apartment houses.

Conrad said the employe who had direct charge of the trucking collections at that time was no longer with the company. It was not known why he had chosen to dump the trunk on the vehicle rather than consign it to the incinerator immediately, as is the ordinary procedure. In any event, the trunk had not been disturbed until yesterday.

Conrad had directed an employe to outfit the truck with tires and drive it to the incinerator. First and O streets southeast, there to dump the trunk.

Before the worker complied, however, a boy, about 12, who had been playing in the lot peered into a hole in the trunk and called:

"Say, mister, there's some fishing tackle in this old trunk. Can I have it?"

Dynamite Impounded

Investigating, Conrad found the dynamite and the caps whose electric wiring had appeared to the youth to be fishing tackle. He notified Third Precinct police who took the explosive in charge. It is now impounded at the precinct station.

Conrad could not determine whether the dynamite had been in the trunk when originally collected or had been placed there subsequently.

He theorized that it might have been stolen from the District project which has been carrying on considerable blasting in nearby Rock Creek Park. The thief, he said, may have sneaked it into the trunk for safe-keeping.

Conrad said he had been informed by the American Security & Trust Co., owners of the lot, that he was to vacate August 15, the next termination of his month-to-month lease. He added that he believed the new tenant was to be the District Red Cross which desired the lot as parking space for the cars of volunteer workers.

However, Otto Lund, District chapter manager, said he was unaware of any such arrangement.

Italian Clubs And Embassy In Close Touch

Letter of Diplomat Calling Conference Reveals Relations

The existence of close relations between the Italian Embassy and Italo-American organizations in Washington was revealed yesterday.

The disclosure followed the dispatch of letters from Vittorio Bifulco, assistant counselor at the embassy, to the presidents of seven or eight Italo-American clubs asking them to call at his office after hours for a conference as soon as possible.

Antonio Mistretta, president of Loggia Cavaletti, largest Italian lodge in the city, told The Post that such letters were not unusual.

Visit Embassy Often

"We receive them frequently," he said. "I have many in my desk. We go over to the embassy very often, every month or so, to talk to the people over there."

Mistretta said he could not remember what had been discussed on previous occasions. As for this call, which he said he would answer by visiting the embassy Sunday, Mistretta commented:

"I don't know what it is all about."

He was anxious to point out, however, that all the members of his lodge are American citizens and "not interested" in what goes on in Italy. About reports that the embassy was about to launch an Italian Red Cross drive, he said he had heard nothing.

Just a Social Call

Bifulco told The Post that he merely wanted the heads of the various organizations to drop in for a social call.

"I had not seen them for about a year," he said, "and it occurred to me that we ought to get together for a talk."

He said there was "nothing in particular" that he wanted to talk to them about and denied that the conferences would deal in any way with the war. Asked whether any attempt would be made to whip up aid for Italy as in the Ethiopian War, Bifulco replied:

"That was the Ethiopian War. This is something else."

During Mussolini's African adventure a nation-wide campaign was maintained to obtain gold in the form of dollars or jewelry that could be melted down. Many campaigners also urged youths to enlist in the Italian army.

Dated After Fascism

Bifulco's letter to the Washington club presidents was in Italian. A translation of the text follows:

"Dear President:

"If you wish, I would like to confer with you at your earliest possible convenience.

"You will find me at my office after hours.

"Best regards. "B. BIFULCO."

The letter was dated August V, 1940, XVIII. The Roman numerals represent the eighteenth year of Fascism.

Chief Shot, Woman Slain In Bandit Duel

By the Associated Press

Oilton, Okla., Aug. 9.—Two gunmen who officers said tossed the body of a red-haired young woman out of their automobile after wounding Police Chief Ben D. Clark were captured tonight at nearby Perkins.

Highway Patrolmen Ralph Boyd and J. R. Butler said one of the bandits had been shot two or three times, apparently in a pistol-shotgun duel with Oilton police, and was in a critical condition.

Boyd said the men gave their names as Bud Lovelace, of Lincoln, Neb., and Bill Hall, a fugitive from the Oklahoma State Penitentiary at McAlester.

Kidnap Victim Along

Papers found in a suitcase indicated the slain woman was a resident of Asher, Okla.

With the fugitives was Bill Glimp, of Drumright, whom they abducted near Oilton. Officers said Glimp was taken to a hospital, but it could not be learned immediately whether he had been shot or beaten.

The body of the woman was found near the business district of this northeastern Oklahoma oil town a half hour after Clark was felled by buckshot blasts into the face and chest. He and Constable C. L. Irwin had sought to arrest the men as suspects in a robbery committed earlier in the day.

Slain With Shotgun

Police said it was evident the woman was slain by her companions, armed with shotguns.

Clark and another officer seeking men who robbed a restaurant early today, spotted the sedan and forced it to the curb.

Clark stepped to the running board and was knocked over by a quick shotgun charge. The sedan sped away as Irwin emptied his pistol at it.

'The Great McGinty,' at Capitol, Gives Back of Hand to Politics

"THE GREAT McGINTY." Paramount picturization of a story written and directed by Preston Sturges, featuring Brian Donlevy and Muriel Angelus, with Akim Tamiroff, Allyn Joslyn, William Demarest, Louis Jean Heydt, Harry Rosenthal, Arthur Hoyt, Libby Taylor, Thurston Hall, Steffi Duna, Esther Howard, Dewey Robinson, Donnie Kerr, Mary Thomas, Drew Roddy and Sheila Sheldon. Reviewed Friday morning, at Loew's Capitol Theater.

It is a pretty stiff lampooning of municipal and State machine politics that Preston Sturges lets loose in "The Great McGinty." It is a paradoxical tale that the author-director has evolved from a wide reportorial experience, having as its primary thesis the proposition that unconscionable graft is its own reward and virtue, under "the system," its own undoing. The fable embodies many stinging analogies between fiction and recognizable fact and gains zest on that account.

BELL

Heavy stress, at the very outset of the picture, is laid upon the pernicious consequences of honesty and humanitarianism after a considerable experience in plunder, by making a bartender in a remote banana country the chief protagonist of the charade. An absconding bank cashier is in a pretty bad way in Dan McGinty's dive and just to prove to him that he doesn't even know the meaning of the word adversity, the barkeep tells him the story that begins, "I used to be Governor of a great State." How all that came about is told by the familiar flashback method of narration, that picks McGinty up as a bum in the breadline and places him in the Governor's Mansion, via the successive steps of ward heeler, alderman and mayor.

Dan McGinty got his start by voting 37 times for The Boss' candidate for mayor, at $2 a time. To The Boss that was an impressive demonstration of political genius and Mr. McGinty, from that moment, was destined to go far. He even underwent a marriage of political expediency to make himself solid with the women voters. It was from his wife that he gradually absorbed something of the finer potentialities of the power he had acquired. That was the beginning of his political end. All of his good intentions weren't good enough to beat back the avalanche of corruption turned loose upon him by the exposed and outraged Boss who deemed himself the beneficiary of the good, old double-cross. Such is the misty outline of a thoroughly interesting and sardonic revelation of politics being played for its own sake and the dough there is in it.

"The Great McGinty" is notable for two reasons. One is that it gallops along with practically no dull moments. The other is that it affords Brian Donlevy his first opportunity before the cameras to be himself—a pungently comic, two-fisted, hard-boiled, kindly and tender fellow—instead of the Bessemer-plated "heavy" he always has been, heretofore. We already have gone to some length, in other columns, to emphasize the fact that this sort of thing is precisely up Mr. Donlevy's little-traveled alley. Opposite him, as the circumstantial wife, whose influence finally is his undoing, Muriel Angelus, in her first important American role, makes an immensely favorable impression and Akim Tamiroff, as The Boss, shares top honors with his soup-kitchen protege. William Demarest, a typical small-time political chiseler, and Thurston Hall, as an overstuffed magnate, add further luster to a splendidly chosen cast for a picture that bounces bouyantly without pretending to be "big." Steffi Duna is assigned to a role just large enough to permit her to dance characteristically. The others are competent, without being overly important.

Gene Ford's "Alley Oomph" stage revue for the new week at the Capitol is composed chiefly of acts that generally are catalogued as "novelty turns." It opens with "The Bricklayers," a canine "PWA" enterprise that reveals exceptional training and then features Jimmy Edmundston in amusing stunts with the English language in reverse. Bert Nagle and Co., offer a feline pantomine that is not without its moments and Cynda Glenn proves herself the hit of the bill in an expansive demonstration of unique talents that cover a wide range, the top of a piano, the stage and the ramp in front of the orchestra. Miss Glenn is not quite like anybody but Miss Glenn—which seemed to please yesterday's first audience no end. In the meantime, the Roxyettes are executing their usual cavortings, including a "swing" treatment of Liszt's "Second Hungarian Rhapsody."

The new issue of the Fox Movietone News is replete with its customary divertissements, including Lew Lehr's crazy commentary upon the professional pursuits of a high-diving dowager, Done up like a Chinese Mandarin, Sam Jack Kaufman leads the orchestra through an Oriental overture that clicked in a large way as the only added auxiliary of a feature that puts a new kink in morality.

Prediction Awry

Rita Johnson, who appears with Lew Ayres in "The Golden Fleecing," was once told by her high school dramatics coach that "she would never learn to be an actress."

The Man Whom Honesty Defeated

BRIAN DONLEVY

as the city derelict who became Governor of a great State through machine politics, only to become a banana-country outcast when his good deeds "caught up with him" and outraged the blue-steel consciences of the grafters who had put him in power. "The Great McGinty," on the screen at Loew's Capitol, affords Mr. Donlevy the most sympathetic role he has had before the cameras

Earle Adds New Stage Bill For Film Comedy's 2d Week

By Richard L. Coe

How are you at eating marshmallows? Can you sing? Perhaps you collect records. This personal catechism may prepare you for the partially new bill at the Earle, where yesterday that merry "sleeper," "My Love Came Back," began an unlooked-for second week and alert Harry Anger inserted some new stage tricks just to keep in practice.

But these days at the Earle it's the audience that needs to keep in practice, too. Ever so gradually, the E street patrons have been taught to sing, with pert Eileen Ritter leading them to the mike for solo chanting. This week Eileen offers not only the customary passes to next week's show, but a record of your vocal effort which you can (1) take home to your doting family or (2) immerse in your favorite gasoline and apply a torch. Eileen may or may not play back your recording. This entertainment makes Spartan demands on the entertainees, but its rewards are suspenseful and funny.

Skelton's Marshmallows

Now about the marshmallows. Always one to make his audience do a little work, if only mentally, Red Skelton employs his final week before hitting Hollywood to promote a marshmallow-eating contest. It's no fake business with stooges in the audience, either, for at yesterday's first show one towheaded mite and a chap not much bigger bounced up out of school to chaw at the sticky white stuff. They get nowhere fast and the prize has all the allure of that golden apple back in the early Olympics. It's a bag of marshmallows. To do scamp Skelton justice, there's also a cash award thrown in.

Other folk in the new stage bill include Rita and Ed Oehman, peppy youngsters whose dancing is more entertaining than their song and who return after only four weeks' absence because you can't help but like their brash buoyancy. La Lage is an agile young lady from the Folies Bergere, of New York and Paris, whose joints simply aren't and whose twirling is happily different. Then there's some Punch and Judy routines which will have you guessing about how many pairs of hands are doing the work. There's only one pair, you'll find, Tommy Trent's. The Roxyettes don't do anything daring for a change, apparently joining the conspiracy to let the audience entertain itself.

As for "My Love Came Back," this is a bit late to be telling you again that it's a disarmingly amusing film, one of those tricks which you enjoy the more the less you expect.

Classics Vs. Swing

It isn't so much its story or situations which make "My Love Came Back" such gentle amusement, but the ticklish way it's told by Director Kurt Bernhardt. Olivia de Havilland is a poor, so honest music student. She's a whiz at the violin, no good at getting places on time. Because she is late to a student concert at her music school, she attracts a wealthy patron of the arts, played by roguish Charlie Winninger. To help her through school, he aids her secretly and she treats him as a fatherly friend. Other people get wind of it, construe the obvious and scandals sizzle. Boy friend Jeffrey Lynn doesn't like it. Ann Gillis and William Orr, Winninger's kiddish kids, don't like it. But understanding wife, Spring Byington, knows what to do.

Fun-loving pals of Olivia are Eddie Albert and Jane Wyman, swingsters '40. They insert new blood into the classics, fuddle old-time music master S. Z. Sakall, make you want to join their classical-swing band. Grant Mitchell, Charles Trowbridge and Mabel Taliaferro are others whose well-known specialties make "My Love Came Back" one of the summer's truly refreshing comedies. Kurt Bernhardt directed with such ingenuous charm that it's safe to say that this first American effort is the starter of a long line-up.

With a cartoon of a tough and knowing rabbit to offset the doleful newsreel, the Earle has a bill which is already proven "escape" manna.

The Care and Feeding of the Daily Column

IN APPROACHING the subject of columning, one must avail oneself of a certain amount of mathematical exactitude. Which, in the language of the cognescenti, or the guys in the know, consists in reducing the daily stint to a slightly elastic formula.

THE EMBRYO COLUMNIST will find an unlimited supply of stiff-bosomed shirts ideal for note-taking, being certain, however to avoid detachable cuffs, which the masters of the trade have found eminently unsatisfactory.

THE BUDDING WRITER must be sure to provide himself with a large supply of rumors which can either be affirmed or denied, depending on the nearness of the deadline, with a 50-50 chance of accuracy.

WE RECOMMEND the use of the "columnist's little helper," a streamlined wastebasket with direct connection to the incinerator, wherein to file any one of the 2,000 daily effusions from 4,000 public relations counsels who have just gotten a new client and would appreciate a little help. The client will be found to be Charles Glitch, assistant third bartender at the Blowtorch Cafe, and a standing member of the Michael J. Finn Association, who has just invented an "astrological cocktail."

AND NOW having assembled our white paper, carbon, typewriter, stiff-bosomed shirts, rumors, household pet, releases and classic phrases, we are ready to begin.

FLASH! The rumor that the real name of Prof. Quiz is not Prof. Quiz is true. He was born Craig Earl in Boston, but "pfffft" with Beantown at the age of 7 when he left to join a circus as a tightrope walker. At the age of 14 he began a tour of Europe as a magician and later turned to the world of the ballet. Returned to school here in America, graduating as a physician, and practiced medicine for 11 years. Became the one . . . the only . . . the Original Prof. Quiz four years ago and has just completed his two hundredth consecutive broadcast.

FLASH! It's a separation for Mrs. Earl and her married name, with the pretty blonde being known as "Mrs. Professor Quiz," thus saving lengthy explanations to other columnists who were wondering what Mrs. Earl was doing traveling around with Prof. Quiz.

FLASH! In four years of broadcasting, Prof. Quiz has "pfffft" with 25,000 silver dollars. This represents the sum paid to contestants on the show, plus a major backache to Lee Little, program director, who is in charge of pay-off money. In four years, Little has carried over 2,000 pounds of silver dollars to the studio.

IN ADDITION, $40,000 in mail prizes have been paid to winners throughout this country and Canada who have been among those who have submitted over 12,000,000 questions since the program has been on the air. Averaging ten words to the question, there has been set up a source of 120,000,000 words which would supply enough columns to reach from here to there—and that might not be a bad idea.

QUIZ-ICAL FACTS. FLASH! The Professor still does magic tricks and has a flair for cooking. The two hobbies have nothing to do with each other. His favorite sport is resting and he is at his best watching a sports event. He has never been late to a broadcast, never missed a broadcast, and has never had any odd experiences in getting to the studio on time. Mrs. Quiz takes care of that. Oddest spots for an air show include St. Louis Municipal Auditorium and a football stadium in North Carolina. Most memorable broadcast occurred the night Bob Trout, flying to Europe on the Yankee Clipper, delivered the opening announcement from the middle of the Atlantic Ocean. Two hundred broadcasts have convinced him that housewives are the smartest group of contenders, while school teachers and lawyers are the lowest scorers. Claims the explanation is easy. Any woman who can think of 47 reasons why papa should stay home and play bridge when he really wants to see a fight should have no difficulty answering the toughest question on his program.

AND NOW, let us check back. The rumors have all been either affirmed or denied, the white paper has been covered, the typewriter is groaning softly, the stiff-bosomed shirt is crumpled, the classic phrases have had their workout, and the "columnist's little helper" has received more than its daily quota of broken sentences and misspelled paragraphs. Our column then is finished. Total elapsed time from striking the first I-key, 23 hours 49 minutes and 15 seconds. Which leaves exactly 10 minutes and 45 seconds before starting the next day's stint. WHAT A RACKET!

The Davis-Boyer Combine Moves to Metropolitan Screen

B. O. appeal intensified to the farthest mathematical degree (hey, remember that B. O. stands for box office!) is placing "All This and Heaven Too" among the important pictures of the century. Not so tremendously heralded as "Gone With the Wind," it is pressing its way toward an equally important success.

"All This and Heaven Too" is the perfect example of the intrinsic human interest of a great cause celebre. As a factual tragedy it rocked the throne of France more than a century ago. The screen resurrection of the story proves the tremendous human appeal of a legal case of essentially equivocal human values. (Fifty years from now, one can imagine our descendants being thrilled by a dramatized version of the Lindbergh case with added romantic angles.)

As a tour de force of cinematics, "A. T. A. H. T." commands unmitigated admiration. To a cold eye, the story is one that implies endless interpretations. But the one chosen in fulfillment of the current best seller—that of idealistic and unfulfilled love—is also a completely possible one, even if not obvious. The tragedy is that of contagious insanity—the madness of the neurotic and malicious wife, an essentially childish person, extending over the husband's personality and finally enveloping an inevitable and horrible homicide.

The overwhelming public reaction to the picture may be partly put down to the fact that it is a pictured rendition of one of the most popular novels of the year, but also certainly to the fact that it represents a nonobvious interpretation of that situation most hackneyed in life and drama, the triangle.

While those great stars, Charles Boyer and Bette Davis, give their best to the picture, while it is distinguished by exquisitely understanding direction (except for a banal prologue and epilogue), has the best of everything in a supporting cast, staging and photography—yet it is one of the great movie successes of all time because, primarily, it is a great story of human beings crushed between the millstones of self-respecting existence and the even more vital demands of Mother Earth.

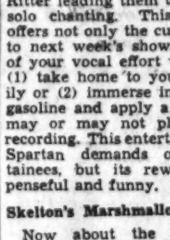
MARY HARRIS.

In Hollywood

—With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Aug. 9.

We can rip, snort, and howl at double features and B pictures. But if we hadn't had B pictures, I doubt if the movie industry would have discovered Garson Kanin. He came into prominence first in a picture called "A Man to Remember," which was made for $110,000 and came darned near getting an Academy Award.



HOPPER

He directed "The Great Man Votes," with John Barrymore, which, by the way, should be shown again today. Through those pictures, he was intrusted with the career of Ginger Rogers in "Bachelor Mother." Now, through his foresight, Frank Fay, who was supposedly washed up on screen, stage and night clubs, plays a priest in "They Knew What They Wanted," and has been signed for three big parts.

Get in on the 1940 boom for "Boom Town" and you'll really be singing "Happy Days Are Here Again." It's a two-fisted story, played by a couple of American he-men, Gable and Tracy, who their own fighting. It's the most believable, laughing, gutty epic of oil fields I've seen. I give credit to three men who were let alone and who got away from the front office. Johnny Lee Mahin, writer; Director Jack Conway, and Producer Sam Zimablist went to Phoenix, Ariz., and came back with this story.

I feel like Claudette Colbert, who said she'd make any sacrifice to play with Clark. Say, if I could get a love scene with that guy, I'd play it for northing!

Orson Welles, who's gotten more free publicity than any actor of our day, was to have started his picture a year ago. Well, he did start the other day, then invited the press. But running true to form, he was an hour late in greeting them. Naturally, most of us didn't wait. I've worked with too many stars, and am too busy to twirl my toes and cool my heels waiting to watch Orson act. Anyway, I can tell more about it when I see him on the screen.

In his 24 years, he's learned every trick P. T. Barnum ever had, except the most important—if you want a favor from a guy, never keep him waiting.

Director Bill Keighley and wife, Genevieve Tobin, have the charitable spirit of Biblical tradition. They are sacrificing for the poor something they really want. Instead of remodeling their 400-acre ranch for themselves, they're turning it into a camp for underprivileged mothers and children. More than 22 cottages will be opened there August 22, each one large enough for three mothers with two children each.

They must supply their own food, but the Keighleys take care of transportation and medical care, and will show movies three times a week.

Bill, incidentally, has worked out a bonus scale for all babies working in his picture "Four Mothers." Here it is: A goo and a gurgle, $5 a day extra; a good wail, $7.50; a howl, $10; and a natural smile, $25.

Bill Holden may get the lead with Ginger Rogers in "Kitty Foyle."

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Aug. 9 (INS).—I must say Universal put over a fast one when they signed Carol Bruce, the big hit of "Louisiana Purchase" right under the noses of all the other studios. A few days ago Dan Kelly, U casting director, flew to New York on business. What the business was he refused to say, but today I learned the inside of this hurried jaunt and this is it: The 20-year-old eye filler who has captivated New York, has signed the contract Kelly carried to her.

PARSONS

There's a little discussion going on at this moment between William Holden and Paramount. Just how it will end no one knows. Bill is asking to be excused from playing in "I Wanted Wings," not because he feels it is a bad story, but because he has made picture after picture without sufficient time to rest between assignments. His salary of $350 a week, Bill also feels is inadequate since he has no control over the number of times he appears on the screen and considering that he plays the lead in these pictures. The case is now being discussed and, of course, if Bill refuses to do "I Wanted Wings," he will be suspended—which would be too bad at this point in his career.

The team of Ruth and Jane Frasee, night club and radio entertainers, was broken up when Ruth married Norman Krasna. Now it appears the whole thing is a blessing in disguise, for Jane gets a chance at the movies. She will be starred in "Moonlight and Melody," a Republic musical, which Joseph Santley will direct and Robert North produce. Johnny Downs has the male lead and Vera Vague, the funniest woman in captivity (I know you've heard her on the radio) will furnish the laughs.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Ann Miller and George White an interesting Victor Hugo twosome; looks as if Judy Garland and Dave Rose aren't cooling, after all. They were at the Bar of Music actually cooing; just as I told you, the two love birds, Norma Shearer and George Raft, will be co-starred in Sidney Kingsley's "The World We Make" when they return from Saratoga; Venita Oakie (Mrs. Jack) had a serious operation yesterday and her friends will be glad to know she came through nicely.

Orry-Kelly hosted a most amusing dinner. Fannie Brice, Eddie Goulding, Polly Moran and others told stories and even acted them out. Mrs. Esmond O'Brien, Mrs. Charlie Feldman, Liz Whitney, Mrs. Danny Danker, Gracie Allen, George Burns and Robin Thomas were a few of those who voted Orry's hospitality and food tops; Vicki Lester and Dr. Sterling Bowan, who were making matrimonial plans not so long ago, no longer care; Muriel Angelus and Eddie Albert, an unexpected combination, enjoying each other's company at dinner; John Boles planed to New York today and from there goes to South America on a three-month personal appearance tour.

Ty Power's grandmother, Mrs. Adelaide Reaume, who has been very ill, visited him on the set today and got a royal welcome; you'd laugh if you knew why Clark Gable turned down the role of Osborne, warden of Sing Sing; Gus Edwards' birthday is August 18 and some of his friends are trying to arrange a radio program in his honor. He's too ill to take part in a testimonial dinner as he did last year; Dick Paxton, Mickey Rooney's stand-in, has grown too tall to stand in for Mickey any longer, so M-G-M has given him a part of his own; that was Gus Kahn, jr., with Ann Rutherford at the Bar of Music.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Britain Is Warned Against Flying Of French Flag

By C. Brooks Peter.
Copyright by New York Times

Berlin, Aug. 9.—Germany issued a sharp warning to the British tonight that any enemy units fighting under the French flag or the blue flag with a red cross, when captured, regardless of their nationality, have no claim to be treated as prisoners of war."

This cryptic German statement appears to indicate that such prisoners would be classed as francstireurs and, as such, liable to summary execution.

The German warning follows the British announcement that French war vessels in their possession would fly the French flag, as well as the flags of any other nationalities aboard. Vessels manned by the legion of Gen. Charles de Gaulle, the British declared, would fly a blue flag with a red cross in the middle, as well as the French national flag. A similar arrangement was announced for airplanes.

The German Version

The Germans today treated British reports relative to yesterday's air battles south of the Isle of Wight as amusingly inaccurate—nothing more. The Germans claim that the British reports varied throughout the day and a representative of the German high command told the correspondents here this afternoon that the organization of the British air force was such that the latter could not have had an accurate report on yesterday's battles until this morning, at the earliest.

Exactly what happened, according to the Germans, is the following:

On the evening of August 7, German reconnaissance units discovered the position of a large enemy convoy. The German navy thereupon sent out an undisclosed number of speed boats which sank three merchantmen in the convoy and set a small tanker afire. TheGermans say all their speedboats returned undamaged.

Yesterday morning, dive-bombers of the German air force sent after the convoy with specific orders to concentrate exclusively on merchantmen, not warships. How many dive-bombers were employed was not revealed but the Germans admit the loss of seven (N-87) machines.

Outnumbered by British

Accompanying and protecting the dive-bombers were large numbers of German pursuiters (ME-109) which engaged British airplanes in three separate engagements. British superiority, the Germans allege, was in the ratio of 30 to 20.

At Dover, meanwhile, the Germans declare, their destroyers shot down 12 British captive balloons, as well as a number of planes.

In the course of these actions, the Germans declare, their planes shot down 33 Spitfires, nine Hurricanes, three Bristol-Blenheims, one Hampton, and three of an unknown type, while their own losses were seven dive-bombers, already mentioned, and three pursuiters. One pursuiter and one destroyer were damaged and forced to make emergency landings on the continent where they cracked up.

Lithuanians Bar Russians From Legation

Soviet Officials Fail In Attempt to Take Over Berlin Offices

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Aug. 9.—Russian officials who sought to take over the Lituanian legation were turned away by the Lithuanians today, despite the fact that their country has been incorporated into the Soviet Union.

The Russians protested and expostulated, speaking first cajolingly and then sharply, but it did no good.

Lithuanian Minsiter Kazys Skirpa (the Russians call him the ex-Minister) was firmly entrenched at least until morning. Skirpa refused to see his Russian callers.

A legation spokesman said later: "We told them we could not recognize the mandate of the group which seems to have taken control in Kaunas. We are still here and will not leave just because some Russians with documents of doubtful validity ask us to.

German spokesmen chuckled but had no comment.

At the Latvian and Estonian legations, minor officials permitted the Russians to take charge.

Italy Gives Consent

Rome, Aug. 9 (AP).—Diplomatic circles heard tonight that Russia had taken control of the Latvian, Estonian and Lithuanian legations with consent of the Italian government which thus tacitly recognized Russian absorption of the three Baltic states.

Brazil Detains Leti's Ship

Copyright by New York Times

Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Aug. 9.—Armed Brazilian marines today boarded the Latvian steamer Ciltvaira, tied alongside the quays. Chartered by a Baltimore firm, the Ciltvaira was ready to sail to Baltimore when her captain received instructions from the Russian government to proceed to Murmansk.

The court issued an order to prevent the ship from leaving Rio de Janeiro, but today it was learned that her fires have been kept up so the court decided to play safe and today the marines were ordered aboard.

British Port Makes Game Of Air Raids

Life Goes on Almost As Usual Despite Harassment by Foe

By Godfrey Anderson,
Associated Press Staff Writer

A Port of Western England, Aug. 9.—Despite magnetic mines strewn by low-flying German planes and the harassment of aerial bombardment, Bristol Channel, England's maritime gateway to the West, still is open to ships of the Seven Seas and their cargoes for embattled Britain.

The aim of the mine-laying planes is not always good. One mine fell on land, damaging a farm and blowing out the window of a seventeenth century village church.

Sometimes this port is closed while minesweepers clean up after the aerial visitors, but interruption of normal trade is slight and life ashore, while bound up in a new set of rules for self-preservation, goes on pretty much as usual.

Raids Almost Nightly

Here they count the nights when there are no air raid alarms—and there have been just four since June 24.

Many bombs have dropped in the open country. One farmer threw open his damaged home to sightseers—and charged them a small fee which he gave to the Red Cross.

On one occasion bombs fell near the village where Queen Mother Mary spends much of her time.

One night a bomb blew a signalman out of his box and damaged a railway siding at the docks, but work soon was resumed.

When a bomb fell near a group of several hospitals it tore a wall off a building, leaving its floors exposed like a doll's house and bringing the adjoining house down on the heads of an old couple in the cellar.

Some Sleep in Shelters

It took a few hours to erect tarpaulin covers across the open side of the hospital. The next day it was usable again.

Some people sleep all night in public shelters. Others sleep downstairs in their homes. And there are some who wait up, playing cards or chatting until about 3 or 4 in the morning and then, "if Jerry is not coming tonight," they go to bed reasonably sure of unbroken sleep.

Afternoon naps are popular.

Hotels serve a "late air raid breakfast" for nervous guests who have spent the night in the cellars.

Children make a game of the air raids. Many may be seen wearing "tin hats" made of cardboard, bearing the words "Junior Warden"—just like daddy wears when he goes to his A. R. P. post.

"It is hard to keep the kids out of the shelters," said one mother. "They play wardens all day. Then they are not frightened when they have to go to the shelters at night."

President to Tour New England Forts

Yard and the Army arsenal at Watertown, Mass.

The Presidential yacht Potomac will be used for part of the trip and Mr. Roosevelt said he expected to put into a little cove at Nahant, Mass., tomorrow to see his youngest grandchild, Haven, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Roosevelt.

Naval vessels which will cost approximately $181,900,000 are under construction or have just been launched in the area the Commander in Chief will visit.

Asked whether there was any possibility of his inspecting Pacific Coast defense bases this summer, Mr. Roosevelt said that he would try to be no more than 12 to 14 hours from Washington at any time.

He told his questioner that if he had thought twice he would realize a West Coast inspection would violate what the President termed one of the essentials—that the President must be within easy reach of the Capital at all times under existing conditions.

Sometime during the New England trip, Mr. Roosevelt said, he would have Col. William Donovan give him a personal report on the recent mystery mission which Donovan carried out in Europe for Secretary of the Navy Knox.

Donovan Has Reported

Col. Donovan, World War commander of the "Fighting Sixty-ninth," returned last Sunday on a camouflaged British flying boat and has already reported to Secretary Knox.

The President disclosed that at a conference yesterday with Secretary Wallace, his Vice Presidential running mate, it had been decided that the Secretary would formally accept his nomination in Des Moines on August 29.

Mr. Roosevelt said he thought Wallace would resign from the Cabinet whenever he started on a campaign trip, but that no plans for any such tours were discussed at yesterday's meeting.

Mr. Roosevelt said he had not read Wendell L. Willkie's favorable remarks on the New Deal farm program.

The President said that the $500,000,000 fund which the Administration had suggested be made available for loans to Latin-American nations probably would be supplemented by similar financial backing in those nations themselves.

On the problem of bringing refugee children from Europe to the United States, Mr. Roosevelt said the principal problem was not a question of theory, but of safety.

He said that no one in the Government wanted the responsibility of loading boats with children unless they had not only promises of safe conduct, but reasonable assurances that the promises would be kept.

The President said the only one definite future date on his schedule was for August 31, when he planned to attend the annual meeting of the Roosevelt Home Club, composed of Democrats in and around Hyde Park.

He hoped, he added, to keep a long-deferred engagement sometime in September to dedicate the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in North Carolina and Tennessee.

Windsors Plan to Visit U. S. Soon, They Reveal in Bermuda

No Date Set, but Duke Is Expected To Familiarize Himself With Duties As Governor General of Bahamas First

By the Associated Press

Hamilton, Bermuda, Aug. 9.—The Duke of Windsor, recalling that the Woolworth Building was the tallest building in New York on his last visit, said today he would go back soon with his American-born duchess to see the sights.

Both the duke and duchess talked enthusiastically of their prospective visit to the United States, but they did not set the date. Presumably they will wait until after the duke moves on to the Bahamas and gets acquainted with his new post as Governor there.

"The duchess hasn't been to the United States for eight years and I haven't been there for 16 years, so it's certainly time we went," the duke observed.

The duchess said she was anxious to go back to see the home folks and that she was "excited" at being so close to home as Bermuda.

The royal couple, at their first interview since arriving yesterday aboard the American Export Liner Excalibur, constantly switched the subject to American topics.

With American informality, they swapped small talk, but steered clear of official topics. There was no hint when they might go to the Bahamas.

Japanese Admiral To Rule Shanghai

The United States adhered to its own position in China last night despite the withdrawal of British troops from the northern part of that country.

At the same time it appeared that this country was sticking to its new embargo on exports of aviation gasoline in the face of Japanese objections.

Sumner Welles, acting Secretary of State, yesterday handed a reply to the Japanese Ambassador, Kensuke Horinouchi. While the contents were not made public, informed quarters considered it unlikely that it promised any modification of the embargo.

1,650 Marines in China

Welles told reporters the withdrawal of British forces from China would have no effect whatever on the American position at this time.

The United States keeps about 1,650 marines in China, most of them at Shanghai, for the protection of American interests and nationals. American forces have been maintained in some parts of China since the Boxer Rebellion. In addition, American naval vessels have been stationed in Chinese waters for a century.

Japanese requests for withdrawal of all foreign military forces from China since the European war began have gone unheeded by the United States.

French Fleet Steams Out

London (Saturday), Aug. 10 (U.P.). France's Asiatic naval fleet, including submarines, has steamed out of Indo-China for an "unknown destination," presumably to take up strategic battle positions to defend the rich French colony against Japanese invasion, the Daily Telegraph reported today.

A Hongkong dispatch to the paper quoted Chinese sources as saying the French warships were deploying to prevent a possible Japanese attempt to storm Indo-China ports with warships or make troop landings on the colony's coasts.

British to Stay in Far East

London, Aug. 9 (AP).—The war office announced today that "British troops at present stationed in Shanghai and in North China are being withdrawn for service elsewhere."

Authoritative sources said the United States Government had been kept informed of Britain's intentions to withdraw the troops and Japan also had been notified.

While the destination of the men was not given, it was considered unlikely they would be taken from the Far East. (Shanghai reports suggested Hongkong or Singapore as the destination.)

Step Arises From War

Informed British sources said the question of shifting the British forces had been under consideration since before the start of the European war. They declined to comment when asked if the move now had any connection with the British-Japanese crisis, adding only:

"This step arises from the fact that Britain is at war."

The original purpose of keeping troops in China under the 1901 international protocol, official sources explained, was to protect British lives and property from banditry and Chinese violence.

They added that, with the development of the Chinese-Japanese war, any practical reason for the existence of these troops disappeared and the government had decided "so useful a force" could be employed to better advantage elsewhere.

3 Capital Groups To Fight Draft

Three local groups yesterday announced plans to fight the conscription bill now before Congress.

Members of the East Washington Peace Club sent a resolution they adopted Wednesday to Senator Edwin C. Johnson (Democrat), of Colorado, condemning the Burke-Wadsworth bill as "a menace to peace, democracy, living standards and the rights of labor."

The Washington Peace Mobilization, with headquarters established at 1410 H street northwest, will hold antidraft rally at 8 p. m. August 20 at the National Press Club.

that while the Italian forces were estimated to be ten times superior to the British in numbers, their fighting ability was not impressive.

As to rumors that there are as many as 120,000 German troops among the Italians in Liby, the paper said these forces were "technical and official" and "more symbolic than effective."

Here and elsewhere in Egypt, specially trained policemen are standing by to cope with any Italian attempt to emulate the Germans and land parachute troops.

An overwhelming victory in the biggest air battle yet fought in the Near East was claimed by the British as they calmly watched the maneuvers of Italian troops in British Somaliland, adopting the attitude of "wait and see."

15 Planes Reported Felled

This aerial engagement was fought yesterday—military news travels slowly in these hot wastes—over Italian Libya and 15 Italian planes were declared by the British to have been sent down in flames.

[The Italian version was that five British planes and two Italian planes were shot down and that the Italian fighters were outnumbered 27 to 16.]

The British asserted that their own formation was outnumbered two to one, but that nevertheless only two British aircraft were lost.

The British are sending their planes out regularly to blast at supply bases of the anticipated offensive into Egypt.

Moves in the Somaliland front merely convinced the British command here that the Italian purpose was to divert attention from the expected main thrust at Egypt.

Italians Trap Camels

Rome, Aug. 9 (U.P.).—Italian forces striking toward Berbera were reported tonight to have captured the strategic Oasis of Bohotleh Wells and entrapped a force of the British native camel corps.

Italian dispatches from Addis Ababa described the capture of the Bohotleh caravansary lying about 20 miles inside the British Somaliland frontier along the camel route from Berbera to the Ogaden region of Ethiopia.

The Italians were reported to have trained Libyan native troops as parachutists for a possible attack on the British air and naval base of Aden, which may be assaulted from the British Somaliland coast.

Fascist reports indicated that the column which captured the Bohotleh Wells, composed mostly of colonial troops and native "dubats," was pressing upon another important oasis known as Burao along the direct road from Bohotleh to Berbera.

Australian Navy at Aden

London, Aug. 9 (INS).—The Gulf of Aden and the sky above it tonight became the newest theater of war, with the Royal Australian Navy fighting off Italian bombers while striking a blow of its own through the air directly against Fascist army headquarters in a captured British Somaliland port.

While two Italian columns pushed overland toward the Somaliland seaport capital of Berbera, a lone naval plane, taking off from the 6,980-ton Australian cruiser Hobart, divebombed and damaged the Fascist headquarters at Zeila, on the Gulf of Aden coast 150 miles west of Berbera, it was announced tonight.

This feat was believed to have retarded seriously the chances of an Italian advance along the coast to Berbera, leaving it up to the Fascist columns from Mergeisa and Oadweina, south of Berbera, to press their northward advance over desert hills without the aid of the Zeila column.

British Fleet Bombed

At the same time, the British fleet in the Gulf of Aden, believed to be composed almost entirely of Australian warships, was violently bombed by high-flying Italian planes, but no damage or casualties were caused and the bombers were driven back by the fleet's thunderous antiaircraft fire.

The lone plane from the Hobart was declared to have inflicted casualties among members of Italy's "military personnel" in bombing and machine-gunning the Zeila headquarters Thursday.

Finns Lay Case Before World In Dispute With Russia

Statement Tells of Recent Disorders Dominated by Slogans 'Down With The Government; Long Live Soviet Finland'

By Otto D. Tolischus

Stockholm, Sweden, Aug. 9.—Exposed to a constant drumfire from the Russian state press and radio, and forced by the direct intervention of the Russian Minister at Helsinki for the release of Russian "Fifth-Column" agents arrested during the antigovernment demonstrations in various Finnish towns, the Finnish government has issued an official statement of its case.

This statement recounts various disorders recently staged by the "Association for Peace and Friendship between Finland and the Soviet Union," which were dominated by slogans such as "Down with the government; long live Soviet Finland!" It likewise recounts that two founders of the association submitted to their meetings and to Parliament baseless libelous charges affecting the probity of the state ministers with a demand for the government to retire, for which both of these men are being prosecuted.

The Finnish government, the statement concludes, has taken precautions to prevent further disturbances.

London, Aug. 9.—Willard Garfield Weston, Canadian head of the biggest bakery in the British Empire, has given Lord Beaverbrook, minister for production, a check for 100,000 pounds (about $400,000) to replace the 16 Hurricanes and Spitfires lost in yesterday's Channel battle.

"Pilots, we cannot replace," Weston said in handing over his check. Weston came to England six years ago to build his business here. He now has 36 factories.

Britain Registers Men for Labor Corps

London (Saturday), Aug. 10. (INS).—Compulsory labor registration was introduced in Britain for the first time today with an order by Labor Minister Ernest Bevin requiring more than 1,000,000 craftsmen to register for war work.

The craftsmen, now privately employed, were ordered to register before August 23. The sweeping step was taken under recent emergency law granting the government wartime dictatorial powers over all persons and property in the United Kingdom.

British Call Unoccupied France a War Zone

Algeciras, Spain, Aug. 9 (AP).—Algiers, Tunisia and French Morocco as well as the unoccupied French territory in Europe will be regarded by Britain as war zones, a communique in the Gibraltar Official Gazette said today.

An order was issued for 1,200 more civilians to leave Gibraltar by tomorrow.

Nazis Forbid French To Listen to British Radio

Berlin, Aug. 9 (AP).—Gen Baron Alexander von Falkenhausen, German military commander for Belgium and northern France, today forbade the population to listen to English radio broadcasts.

Another decree prohibited the unauthorized wearing or possession of uniforms and insignia of the German army, the Nazi Party or its various formations.

ments with Hoover, said that "at this time in the world's history when democratic government and method is in test we should be especially careful to keep alive the democratic process in arriving at governmental policies and acts.

Must Be Unhampered

"The Chief Executive and Congress must bear their appropriate responsibilities and the candidate for the Presidency of the United States should reserve to himself an unhampered right of public discussion."

The nominee talked during the day with about 50 western Kansas editors. Asked whether he had any Wall Street connections, he made this statement:

"I occupy no business position and have no business connections of any kind in Wall Street or any place else. I do have a small investment in the company of which I was formerly the head.

"Without boasting, I think I am one of the few men ever nominated for President of the United States without a promise or obligation of any kind with anybody, either direct or indirect. . . .

"I think that situation is due to my own belief and character. It may be the fact that nobody thought I would be nominated. Anyway it is completely true. It is true today as the campaign opens and it will be true when the campaign closes."

Willkie earlier today picked up President Roosevelt's statement that Mr. Roosevelt was a poorer and wiser man since entering the New York governorship in 1928 and added:

"I think it is generally true that people have become poorer and wiser since 1928 regardless of the acceptance of public office."

The Republican nominee for the Presidency told a press conference:

"The President apparently made his statement to my suggestion that all Federal officials file statements of their assets upon entering and leaving office.

Generally True, He Retorts

"I could say that (Willkie referred to Roosevelt's statement) of myself. I think it is generally true that people have become poorer and wiser since 1928, regardless of the acceptance of public office.

Willkie turned to Mayor Rolland B. Marvin, of Syracuse, N. Y., who attended his press conference, and asked: "Couldn't you say that for yourself, Mayor?"

Marvin responded affirmatively.

Marvin reported to Willkie that things are going in grand shape in the central part of New York."

Asked whether conditions looked better for Willkie than they did for Roosevelt four years ago, the Syracuse Mayor said they did. He said, there was "considerable" antagonism to a third term.

Willkie announced that Herbert Hoover would arrive from West Yellowstone, Mont., about 9 p. m. (Eastern standard time) Sunday.

The former President will spend Sunday evening with Willkie. The two are expected to hold a general discussion of campaign strategy and issues.

Cudahy Expects To Be 'Crucified'

Cudahy in London, on Tuesday, August 6, last.

"From the transcript, it would appear that Ambassador Cudahy received at an informal gathering some American correspondents and some representatives of the British press who had requested interviews with him.

Instructions Violated

"As I previously stated, the Ambassador's interview was given without prior authorization from, or without prior notification to, the Department of State.

"I am sure that no one will question the sincerity of the Ambassador's sympathetic interest in the future well-being of the Belgian people, an interest which is shared by the people of the United States. Nevertheless, the interview given was in violation of standing instructions of the Department of State, and certain of the views expressed by the Ambassador are not to be construed as representing the views of this Government.

"The incident illustrates once again the importance which must be attributed by American representatives abroad to the department's instructions to refrain at this critical time from making public statements other than those made in accordance with the instructions of the Department of State.

"By direction of the President, Ambassador Cudahy has been requested to return to the United States immediately for consultation."

Won't Retract a Word

The London Daily Mail quoted Cudahy, the Associated Press reported, as saying "I do not retract one word from what I said."

"I have done my job and I return to the United States with reports of great efforts being made by Great Britain that should inspire my countrymen," Cudahy told the Mail.

"I leave confident that this little country of yours will defend itself to the last man and woman and will never be conquered."

Tall, handsome and wealthy, Ambassador Cudahy, a member of the meat-packing family, has occupied several diplomatic posts under President Roosevelt, whom he supported actively in 1932 and 1936.

From 1933 to 1937 he was Ambassador to Poland, then was Minister to Ireland, and in January of this year was promoted to the twin posts of Ambassador . . to Belgium and Minister to Luxembourg.

He was credited with giving the State Department advance word and unusually prompt reports on the German occupation of the Low Countries in May. Sticking to his post of duty, he was partially deafened and almost knocked down by a German bomb that fell only 300 feet from the United States Embassy in Brussels. For a week he was cut off from communication with Washington, then made his way to Paris and later accompanied the French government on its flight from the capital.

Adm. Ghormley Sent to London As Navy Observer

Rear Admiral Robert L. Ghormley, assistant chief of naval operations, has been sent to London, reportedly on orders by President Roosevelt, to act as a special naval observer, it was revealed last night.

He was accompanied by two aides, Lieut. Comdr. B. L. Austin and Lieut. Donald J. McDonald, who also will act as observers. The trio will report to Joseph B. Kennedy, United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, and will be attached to the embassy staff.

Capt. Allen G. Kirk, the present naval attache in London, will remain there.

The mission comes midst increasing speculation over what will happen to the British fleet if Germany conquers England.

Only last week Col. William J. Donovan, World War hero, returned from a special trip to London, made at the request of Secretary of the Navy Knox. Donovan and Knox have refused to explain reasons for the trip, but Knox said that Donovan did a "swell job."

Frozen Foreign Assets

The United States has impounded the assets in this country belonging to the governments and citizens of invaded European nations. These assets cannot be removed except by special Treasury license, and Secretary Morgenthau has just declared that he proposes "to sit on this money and do nothing" for the present. That seems the proper policy to pursue for the time being, in order to protect rightful owners against possible seizure and forced conversion of their holdings into dollar balances to be placed at the disposal of Germany.

Our Government is justified in regarding itself as in a sense a trustee for the funds confided to our safekeeping by countries involved in the war and overrun by an invading force. The problem which confronts us is made more difficult, however, by reason of the fact that these "frozen" assets are the property of governments as well as individuals.

Furthermore, before its collapse the government of France had indicated its intention to take over the dollar assets of its nationals, whenever needed, to build up balances for financing war purchases. This tendency to disregard distinctions between public and private holdings may result in demands from the reconstituted governments of France and the other conquered countries for transfer en masse of all assets held here for account of their respective national groups.

If such demands are made in the near future, the United States may properly plead the unsettled conditions in Europe and the uncertain status of the new governments as an excuse for refusing to comply.

It is unfortunate, however, that Secretary Morgenthau has chosen to raise the question of the war debts at this juncture and to suggest that frozen funds accredited to France might be applied to the discharge of her defaulted war obligations to the United States. His suggestion would entail seizure and application of privately owned as well as government-owned holdings to payment of public obligations. It would also mean discrimination against private investors in occupied debtor countries, for Great Britain—our chief debtor on war account—would not have her dollar holdings disturbed.

Of course, if American property in the occupied areas should be confiscated or claims for damages denied, it might become necessary as a protective measure to retain custody of funds belonging to the offending governments and their citizens. But that is a bridge which need not be crossed until we come to it.

We can only hope that the return of peace will witness the restoration of responsible governments, making it possible to negotiate settlements of these complicated claims on an equitable basis, without threats or coercion on either side.

A Candid Report

The National Defense Advisory Commission is taking the public into its confidence by giving out certain pertinent facts concerning the preparedness program. The interview with various members of the commission broadcast on Thursday was reassuring because no extravagant claims were made and there was no effort to minimize the difficulty of the task ahead.

Mr. Knudsen reported the production of airplanes to be approximately 900 per month. An insignificant output compared with the goal set by the President. But he expects production to have been stepped up to 1,500 planes monthly by the first of the year. That is an encouraging outlook. It is also reassuring to hear that the number of workers in aircraft factories has increased nearly one-third since last January.

Mr. Knudsen's information about production progress was supplemented by Mr. Hillman's discussion of plans for training skilled workers. Mr. Stettinius dealt with the procurement of essential raw materials needed for the manufacture of thousands of required articles. He confessed frankly that the mobilization and coordination of industry for defense purposes would be a long job and not an easy one. "It calls for full cooperation and patience," he said.

By giving the public detailed reports of progress at frequent intervals the commission should be able to scotch unfounded rumors of an alarmist nature about the defense program. It should not hesitate, however, to expose weaknesses of the defense organization that call for the remedial action afforded by an aroused public opinion.

Since the commission acts only in an advisory capacity to regular Government agencies, it is in a position to take an objective critical view of actual accomplishments. Its usefulness will undoubtedly be enhanced by maintaining an objective attitude and sharing its information with the public.

Mr. Farley's Mantle

President Roosevelt will probably end his second term with only three of his original Cabinet members still on the job. Postmaster General Farley will take his official leave on August 31. Secretary of Agriculture Wallace will resign or go on leave without pay before his campaign for the Vice Presidency begins. Only Secretary of State Hull, Secretary of the Interior Ickes and Secretary of Labor Perkins will remain.

Death claimed three members of the first Roosevelt Cabinet—Secretaries Woodin, Dern and Swanson. Resignations were handed in by Homer S. Cummings and Daniel C. Roper, of the original New Deal Cabinet, and by several members appointed since 1933.

It is not surprising, of course, that many changes should be made in the President's official family during the course of seven and a half years. Yet the trend of these changes is significant. The effect has been to weed out of the Cabinet every Jeffersonian Democrat, except Secretary Hull.

The resignation of Mr. Farley greatly emphasizes this fact. So long as the genial New Yorker remained a member of the President's official family he served as a binding tie between the old-line Democrats and the New Dealers who took control when President Roosevelt was elected. His personal popularity and his tremendous political influence were factors of the greatest importance in keeping the two wings of the Democratic Party flapping harmoniously.

With Mr. Farley out, Secretary of Commerce Hopkins becomes the chief political influence in the Cabinet. Indeed, it was Mr. Hopkins and not the Postmaster General who served as a one-man steering committee, under direction of the President, at the Chicago convention. An ardent New Dealer whose name is to Jeffersonian Democrats as is a red flag to a bull, Mr. Hopkins has no chance of healing the breach in the majority party's ranks with the same degree of success attained by Mr. Farley.

Thus at the beginning of his third-term race Mr. Roosevelt has lost one of his greatest political assets. And that loss is the more poignant because the President and Mr. Farley came to a parting of ways over the third-term issue. The man who led the 1932 and 1936 campaigns has walked out because he believes his chief is making a serious mistake. That decision will necessarily influence many Jeffersonian Democrats who have always been a little skeptical of the New Deal and hostile to the idea of a third term for any President.

As the contest is now shaping up, the President will have to rely far more upon his immediate followers, as distinguished from the old-line Democrats, than he has ever done before.

Philippine Fascism

The late Huey Long once argued that fascism might come to a nation in the guise of antifascism. The Kingfish's paradox has, fortunately, remained untested so far as the United States is concerned. But there is one area under the Stars and Stripes where it appears to be receiving startling confirmation.

"I am," said President Manuel Quezon of the Philippines a little while ago, "the opponent of dictatorship in every form." Yet at the very moment he was protesting his love for democracy he was asking the National Assembly to vest him with practically absolute powers.

This week the Assembly gave way to his demands. The emergency powers bill requested by Mr. Quezon has passed its second reading. Final enactment is regarded as a mere formality. As a result, President Quezon will soon have the right to draft ablebodied citizens for farm labor or any other service; take over farm lands and industrial establishments; control wages and profits in all lines of business; regulate working hours; commandeer ships; fix rents. And he will be able to exercise these sweeping powers for the remainder of his present term in office.

There is no doubt that, like every other nation, the Philippines face a grave emergency at present. The war has dealt serious blows to the economy of the islands. Japan's southward expansion has increased Philippine insecurity, although defense of the islands is, and until 1946 will remain, wholly a problem for the United States.

The concentration of added power in the hands of the Philippine executive may have been inevitable. Yet the extent of the authority he demanded strongly suggests that President Quezon's ardor for democracy is not very deep. As The Post's special correspondent at Manila has pointed out, Mr. Quezon's ideological revolution occurred with suspicious haste after the collapse of France and the triumph of the totalitarian powers in Europe.

It is a very real question whether Mr. Quezon's emergency powers bill does not contravene the spirit and letter of the Commonwealth Constitution and thus of the Independence Act. In any event, we are now witnessing the strange spectacle of a nation which clamored for independence, because it had become capable of self-government, turning totalitarian even before that independence is fully achieved.

Don't Rock The Boat

The attitude of House leaders on the Kennedy bill will be disappointing to those who thought they saw a new chance to bring the subject of District reorganization to the floor. There is sound reasoning, however, behind the negative reaction which followed Representative Randolph's conference Thursday with Majority Leader Rayburn.

The Kennedy bill has been on the House calendar for several months, but it has been generally understood that the measure would be ignored because of an objection raised by President Roosevelt. This objection was based on the bill's provision divorcing the District budget from Federal control.

Although the Budget Bureau seems to have cut the ground from under the President's opposition by independently giving the District Commissioners discretion in the details of budget making, the local reorganization bill still faces a good deal of opposition in Congress.

With so little time for consideration of District measures, it might be unwise to touch off a debate which would minimize the chances for passage of the Sumners resolution to grant the District representation in Congress. Support is lining up rapidly for this proposed constitutional amendment, and unless a diversion arises its chances in the House are excellent.

Although the resolution has strong backing in both parties and should not be considered a political issue, Campaign Manager Edward J. Flynn's call for general Democratic support doubtless will have its effect. If the resolution is given privileged status Tuesday by the Rules Committee, all energies should be concentrated on speeding it through the House while the signs are favorable.

Indiscreet Diplomats

Rebukes to a certain group of American diplomats are becoming almost a routine necessity at the State Department. Only a few months ago Secretary Hull had to inform James H. R. Cromwell, who was then Minister to Canada, that he had contravened standing instructions to American diplomatic officers. Now a similar reprimand has been handed to John Cudahy, Ambassador to Belgium, for his undiplomatic remarks in London a few days ago.

There can be no question as to the propriety of this rebuke. Mr. Cudahy violated the rules of conduct in the diplomatic service in a particularly flagrant manner. It is beside the point that his statements in London tended to reflect upon British policy and to praise the conduct of German soldiers. The simple fact is that ambassadors and ministers to foreign countries forgo the right of expressing their views on international issues, without the consent of the Department of State.

The only salutary aspect of this incident is that it may encourage President Roosevelt to give up the practice of appointing amateurs to important diplomatic posts because of their generous contributions to political campaign funds. With international relations strained by a prolonged period of acute tension, the State Department needs experienced diplomats at every important world capital.

'Make Me A Child Again—'

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch

A psychoanalyst would have a field day explaining the case of those six Massachusetts businessmen who rented a narrow-gauge railroad and spent Sunday playing at engineer. It is new proof that the boy is father to the man, and perhaps wiser. His ambitions, though submerged, do not vanish.

It is doubtful if those men ever did anything that gave them deeper satisfaction—a greater sense of self-expression—than shoveling coal and pulling the throttle in the engine of the 15-mile Bridgton & Harrison Railroad in the back country of Maine.

Any man who as a boy spent long hours dreaming of becoming a railroad engineer, of sitting at the controls as the great train speeded into far territory, of waving casually from the cab at a new generation of boys to whom he would be a demigod, of tooting the whistle, maybe, near the home of a certain girl—any such man, and it must be almost every man, will admire the resourcefulness of those amateur New England railroaders who made their boyhood dreams come true.

Of Name-Calling

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I should like to see The Post take a leading part in a campaign to keep the debate on conscription (and other national defense and foreign policy matters) from degenerating into a name-calling contest.

There is no question but that feelings run high on these issues. But is there not room on both sides of every question for loyal Americans to have sincere opinions? Why must the honesty, integrity, and unselfishness of any man or woman be called into question because of an outspoken expression of belief on a vital issue?

I think both sides are equally at fault in the present instance, and it doesn't much matter who first began the practice. Those opposed to conscription are calling the others warmongers, professional patriots, selfish men more interested in protecting dollars than lives. Those in favor of conscription are calling the others slackers, pro-Germans, Fifth Columnists, and so forth. The truth is that these epithets probably do not apply to 1 per cent of the people on either side, while to accuse men like Col. Lindbergh and Senator Wheeler on one side, or Walter Lippmann and Gen. Pershing on the other, of being unpatriotic, or un-American, is foolishness pure and simple.

Actually, there is nothing that foreign agents would like better than to have bitter feeelings engendered between large sections of the American people. Let us hold our opinions, and disagree as much as necessary, but let us be decent about it and respect those on the other side of the fence.

DAVID H. SCULL.
Washington, Aug. 7.

Cause Of War

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a world provided by the Creator with every conceivable element of prosperity and happiness for all men, we have the anomaly of four of the larger nations engaging in wars of subjugation of other nations, with the result that half the world is facing the horrors of destitution and famine.

Investigation as to the basic cause of international warfare will develop the fact that wars are most easily generated when poverty and distress prevail among the people and when the only recourse seems to be the conquest of other people who have in greater measure that which is wanted.

Going down to the genesis of the whole matter, the blame for international warfare must be laid at the doors of institutions of learning the world over which have neglected the most important of all the sciences in relation to human welfare—the science of political economy. This blame applies quite as much in our own country as elsewhere. Had the cardinal principles of political economy been universally respected, there would be no monopoly of land, there would be no unjust taxation and, most important of all, free trade would have been the rule everywhere.

Hennings Bill

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have never heard of anyone who thought war was a pleasant pastime. According to the experts, the rank and file of the population of continental Europe will undergo the most trying times of the war this winter unless the United States forces Great Britain to let enough food into the occupied areas to allay the threat of famine. I do not think we should put this pressure on the British. Most realists agree that they are fighting our fight, and therefore, we ought to do everything in our power to help them. Sending food to Belgium and France will not do this.

A man who is starving to death would just as soon die from a bullet as from lack of food. If we do send food to the stricken areas, Germany will have an easy time at home while beating the people who are fighting for us; whereas if we do not, there will be all sorts of revolutions and uprisings against the well-fed, intruding Germans. The Hennings bill, now pending in Congress, would be a great aid in relieving the situation without aiding the Nazis, and certainly ought to be and will be passed without much discussion. This bill presents a very different set-up than any proposition to send food abroad. This point of view may seem cold-blooded to some, but the present crises are not the time to exercise insidious sentimentality.

Arming The CCC

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The country needs 400,000 men for military service, so we are told. Approximately this number of men already is available on the Government pay roll and could be inducted into the Army within two or three weeks—if Congress had the courage to do the commonsense and patriotic thing.

As a citizen and a taxpayer I believe that those who are under direct and special obligation to our Government should be willing and anxious to show their appreciation of Uncle Sam's generosity by serving in the armed forces of the United States. I refer to the several hundred thousand young men in the CCC camps and on relief.

The sensible (but probably not the politically expedient) step for Congress to take is to quit fussing over conscription and put these Government dependents in the Army now. This would avoid any disruption of industry and employment now so essential for national defense. STANLEY F. MORSE.

The Lindbergh Speech

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As to Col. Lindbergh's statement that people are beginning to realize that the problems of Europe cannot be solved by the interference of America and that in the future we may have to deal with a Europe dominated by Germany. I would like to make the following comment.

The European problems can only be solved by the great charter of liberties of England, the Magna Carta, which remains a foundation stone of our democracy.

One necessary preliminary is the defeat of totalitarian imperialism.

Federalism was first discovered and successfully applied in the United States. It has since been copied in Canada and Australia.

More than 800 years ago St. Augustine said "banish justice and what are empires but brigandage on a large scale?"

The state is not enough. Above the state are higher laws by which both states and individuals are judged.

That is our creed in the United States and in the British Empire; but it is not Hitler's.

A true federation of states is necessarily the result of voluntary agreement and not of compulsion. This also is our creed, but it is not Hitler's.

Our task as well as that of the British Empire is to check the advance of totalitarian imperialism of all kinds.

Gen. Pershing ably warned us "The time has come when we must rise up as a united people to make secure our country's independence and our great inheritance of constitutional liberty." R. J. KLYN.
Alexandria, Va., Aug. 5.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the Administration is not trying to get us into the war, why is an Administration spokesman always chosen to answer an address by Col. Lindbergh when he counsels us to stay out of war? Does he not know more about aviation warfare and European conditions than do the politicians who seek to intimidate and discredit him? Have we at last reached that state of intolerance, fanaticism, and hysteria when an American citizen can no longer express his honest opinion without being called a Fifth Columnist?

Must a person share the hatred and hysteria of the Administration in order to be patriotic? Why was Col. Lindbergh formerly called into consultation by the Administration as an expert if today he is only "Mr. Lindbergh" and "only a flier," since he has the courage and manhood to speak his mind?

Whether he is right or wrong, is not his opinion at least as good as that of the politicians who at the behest of the President reversed themselves on the arms embargo and now seek to ridicule, smear and question the motives of anyone who dares to oppose the war tendency of the Administration? Is this Americanism? A PLAIN AMERICAN.
Washington, Aug. 6.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the Senate yesterday Senator Pepper assailed Col. Lindbergh as "the chief of the Fifth Column in this country." Lindbergh is no more "Fifth Column" than you or I.

It might interest Senator Pepper and others of his ilk who seem more interested in helping England than the United States that Lindbergh simply mentioned something that is already being talked about quite favorably in England. The London Times of July 1 editorially refers to the new Europe, in which it hopes that "American inspiration and American resources," which it calls "essential factors," will be given toward "the moral and economic reconstruction of the new Europe." F. F.
Washington, August 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with much interest and esteem in The Washington Post the able and forthright statements delivered in the United States Senate by Claude Pepper, of Florida, of August 5, concerning Col. Charles Lindbergh. Senator Pepper has done a great service to many people who heretofore had no knowledge of the flyer's Nazi frame of mind.

From the Raleigh News and Observer

"Robert H. McNeill, a lawyer here for 30 years, yesterday accepted the Republican nomination for Governor of North Carolina and predicted that he and Wendell Willkie would carry the State."

That may be important political news in the District of Columbia. In North Carolina, it is on a par with the "bolt" of John W. Hanes, former Undersecretary of the Treasury, whose action was also announced from his real home, which in his case is New York.

North Carolinians hope that Mr. McNeill and Mr. Hanes will come down and get acquainted. It would probably not take either one until November to realize that any idea of carrying the State for Willkie or McNeill is just an idle dream, with one of the pair having as much chance as the other. If they do not wish to lose their dreams, they would be well advised to insure them heavily before exposure to the atmosphere of reality.

The Post Impressionist

"Je Suis Francaise"

EVERYONE who has ever known France is now composing, in his mind or on paper, elegies for that country which we loved so well and so ineffectually. To each of us France meant a different thing, and each of us is going over that string of memories, like our recollections of a person newly dead, which will be all that we shall have to remind us of something that is forever gone. What the new France will be no one can know, but we may be sure that with the slogan of "Liberte, Egalite, Fraternite" perished a way of life that we shall not see again.

And do the people of France, those proud, brave individualists, still boast, under their new masters, whether they be the foes from without or the traitors from within, that they are French?

At the Easter of 1929 I went down to Chartes to make my first Communion, at the oldest shrine of Our Lady of France. I went with Jim, who worked in the same office that I did and who had been a captain in an Irish regiment during the war. We stopped not at the big hotel for the rich and the tourists but at the Hotel du Grand Cerf, a small place that radiated the cleanliness and the order so dear to the French.

Our bedroom, with its tiled floor and enormous beds, was immaculate, but without that feeling of antiseptic sterility that so often mars things that are well scrubbed. The food was simple, but each dish was cooked with exquisite care. And when we praised the excellent cheese that followed the salad, madame told us proudly that it was simply the fromage du pays.

It is not my purpose to describe the cathedral, the Peacock of La Beauce. I could not, even if it were. We made our pilgrimage to the Shrine of Notre Dame Sous Terre, to the very spot where, tradition says, the first Christian missionaries found the inhabitants venerating a statue of the Virgo Partitura, and to them they preached the Gospel of her Son.

Then we entered the cathedral itself and found ourselves in that other world whose light comes through the glass of Chartres. We spent the afternoon of Holy Saturday there as members of the throng who were preparing themselves for the feast of the morrow. The exercises were brought to a close by pontifical vespers, sung in a Gregorian that was to the ears as the sunset rays coming through the glass were to the eyes.

We went to early mass and received Holy Communion in the crypt, and we found ourselves kneeling next to madame and to Marie, the little waitress at the Grand Cerf. They smiled briefly at us, and after mass we walked back to the hotel with them. Madame was pleased to learn that her guests were croyants. She herself, she said, had grown up in the shadow of the cathedral, pour ainsi dire, and it was easy to see that her whole life centered about it.

For breakfast Marie brought us enormous strawberries and fresh croissants and coffee. Then we went for a stroll down to the Basse Ville at the foot of the eminence on which the cathedral towers, and afterward returned for the pontifical high mass.

After a second afternoon in the cathedral I knew that I could not return on the evening train to Paris, I had but little money with me, so Jim promised to send me a hundred francs as soon as he got back to the office, and thus I should be able to stay a few days more. This I explained to madame, and she expressed herself as greatly pleased that I should have the opportunity of appreciating the cathedral more at my leisure.

The following days I spent from dawn till dark in the cathedral, watching the changes in the glass with the shifting light or studying the infinitude of figures carved on the exterior. Madame introduced me to the verger, who was her cousin, and he admitted me to the tribune and the towers. Only one thing marred those days. One afternoon we were all asked to leave the edifice, and the doors were barred. Then a party of American tourists was admitted and, like masters of the earth, free from contact with the native herd, they wandered about while the organist played for them. Madame did not like that, either, when I discussed it with her after dinner that evening; but the authorities needed the money so desperately for the maintenance of the fabric, and the Americans were rich and paid well to have the cathedral to themselves. "On y exclue tout le monde, y compris le bon Dieu and la Sainte Vierge," she added, none too reverently.

On the Tuesday, when it should have come, there was no letter from Jim. Neither was there on Wednesday nor on Thursday. I was beginning to be a little frantic, and I made a nuisance of myself to the people at the postoffice, to whom I explained all the circumstances, but who still insisted that there was no letter for me.

Finally, on Friday, I gave up hope. Luckily I had my return ticket to Paris, but I didn't have even the beginning of enough money to pay my hotel bill.

"Madame," I explained, "there is nothing left for me to do but to go back to Paris and find out what has happened, for the longer I stay here the bigger my bill becomes and the smaller become my chances of paying it. If you agree, I shall leave my watch with you as security, and then when I return to Paris I will send you the money, and you can return the watch."

"You will do nothing of the kind," said Madame, and my heart sank within me. She paused impressively, and then continued, "You will return to Paris, yes, and you will send me the money for your bill, yes, but you will not leave your valuable watch with me, no."

"But, madame," I protested, "you don't know me. How do you know I will send you the money? I insist on leaving the watch."

"No, monsieur, don't insult me by talking in that way. Remember," she said, and her pride shone in her black eyes, "je suis francaise."

A Subversive Group

TO RETURN to the subject of Mrs. Roosevelt's decision to remain a member of the Newspaper Guild, which is controlled by the Communists, I would like to call attention to the effrontery of this lady's attitude in presuming to vote and exert an influence in affairs which are none of her business, but which are terribly important to legitimate journalists.

Journalism is not Mrs. Roosevelt's occupation; she is not properly eligible for membership in the guild, and her resolve to remain a member, notwithstanding the fact that it has become a Soviet outpost, is in contrast to her hasty and sensational resignation from the D. A. R., which, whatever its faults, has never been accused of adherence to the Communist Party or the Nazi or Fascist movement. Her determination to remain in the guild and participate in its decisions is an imposition on the rights of editorial workers in and out of the guild.

This organization recently held a convention in Memphis, in which the Muscovite control was confirmed by a typical Communist political trick. The non-Communists had organized a rebellion, and the Communists thereupon split into two factions for a mock fight.

THEY SET UP a phony rebel faction of their own, which took the play away from the legitimate, anti-Communist group, and the two Communist groups then closed in from both sides to prevent "Red-baiting" and reelect the bolo control.

I called the turn on this before the convention met, exposing then the fake character of the fight between the two Communist groups. The scheme was so good that it was just too good; for it revealed at last to many editorial workers the smooth, efficient political cunning of the Communists in control. At the psychological moment the two bands of comrades dropped their pretense of antipathy and came together to defeat the Americans and silence a proposed condemnation of Communism, along with the two other infectious political diseases.

The Communist Party is now in absolute control of the American Newspaper Guild, and any employer who signs a closed-shop contract with this transmission belt, whereby non-guild employes would be compelled to join or be fired, is literally driving these people into the power of the Communist Party.

SUCH A MOVE is now in progress on the New York Times and in the Hearst papers, and the authority of the United States Government is being invoked, under the Wagner Act, to help a subversive organization to control these journalists.

That Mrs. Roosevelt is not aware of the Communist control of the guild I will not admit. This is no matter of interpretation or opinion. It is an obvious fact, and her intention to remain a member for the purpose of fighting the Communists will be considered in the light of her attitude toward the Communists in control of the American Youth Congress.

In that organization her activity has seemed more like cooperation or conciliation than opposition. But, aside from the question whether she will oppose or cooperate with the Communists, the fact remains that she has no right to intrude in decisions affecting the professional and political freedom of real newspaper people. She is not a journalist but a diarist and a dilettante, and her participation in guild affairs is a presumption.

THE COMMUNISTS are now deliberately trying to drive out the legitimate newspapermen and women, so that they can hold over them the penalty of expulsion. Thus when they have achieved the closed shop they would permanently exclude from all departments of journalism all those individuals who have the principle and the courage to reject Soviet leadership.

They have now come into the open, after several years of evasion, with a frank declaration that anyone who resigns from the guild may be permanently expelled from membership and thus made ineligible for employment in any closed shop.

The prestige of the Presidency of the United States, which is Mrs. Roosevelt's sole qualification here, should not be added to the weapons with which a subversive organization is attacking the rights of American citizens.

Illustrating The Need For Discipline

IT WILL BE a great pity if in discussing the organization of the military power of the United States the objectors and the skeptics take to calling any measure "totalitarian" if it applies to every one, "dictatorial" if it applies compulsion, "Fascist" if it provides authority, "Nazi" if it imposes discipline, "Communist" if it equalizes burdens, and so forth and so on. They are doing no service to the cause of freedom and democracy when they make it appear that only the sworn enemies of liberty can provide the discipline, the order, the authority and the sense of universal obligation which are indispensable to the survival of a nation.

Nor is there any scintilla or historical truth in the assertion which is so frequently heard that free nations transform themselves into totalitarian states when they recognize the need for organization, discipline, and authority. Quite the contrary. In every instance—Russia in 1918, Italy in 1922, Germany in 1933, France in 1940—it was feeble government, indiscipline, disorganization, impotence, calamity and defeat which led directly to the loss of liberty. Here in the United States we shall not become a totalitarian state by adopting conscription, by organizing industry, by imposing national discipline upon our public and our private behavior. The downfall of the democracies in Europe has been due to their weakness; they have been disintegrated from within and then conquered from without because they failed to discipline their liberties and to establish authority in their democracy. Every totalitarian state has risen out of the ashes of defeat, frustration, humiliation and confusion; none has risen from an orderly establishment of authority and deliberate acceptance of discipline.

THE NEED FOR discipline in American life has been made very evident by two incidents during this past week. One was the affair centering around Senator Rush Holt; the other was the affair of Ambassador Cudahy's newspaper interview in London. Each incident is a culminating example of the kind of conduct which, when it becomes general, has everywhere else in the world made popular government unworkable. The fact that Senator Holt and Ambassador Cudahy were moved by sincere feelings does not make the matter one bit better; all that counts is that in a time of grave crisis and concerning matters affecting the very highest interests of the Nation—its defense and its foreign policy—Senator Holt had no conception of the duty of a Senator, and Ambassador Cudahy no conception of the duty of an Ambassador.

Senator Holt's offense consisted in an effort to degrade the debate about the merits of the conscription bill into a class struggle between the rich and the poor. He charged that a group of rich men had conspired in New York City to draft poor boys into the Army. The falsity of the charge is self-evident when one remembers, which Senator Holt did not, that the bill favored by the members of the Military Training Camps Association would not only make their own sons liable to conscription but would in actual practice make them more likely to be inducted into the Army. For, on the whole, the sons of the well-to-do families do not have the kind of jobs which would exempt them from military service. The charge, being false, is as wicked an attack upon the unity of the Nation as it would be to shout "fire" in a crowded theater because one had smelled the smoke of a cigarette. For a Senator of the United States to behave in this fashion is to abuse the privileges of his office and to debase the right of free speech.

AMBASSADOR CUDAHY'S interview was obviously a more innocent performance. But it is a prime example of what trouble can be caused by the untrained, inexperienced, uninformed gentlemen who enter the diplomatic service for no better reason than that they have contributed to the election of the party in power. The subject of Mr. Cudahy's interview was one of the most delicate and difficult problems with which the American Government must deal. The feeding of the populations in the countries which have been devastated by the Nazi invasions involves questions vitally affecting our relations with Germany, with Great Britain, and with the peoples of at least eight nations. For an American Ambassador to take a position on these questions before he has consulted his own Government, and what is worse, to take his personal position publicly in a country where he is not accredited is a violation of the elementary rules of diplomatic behavior. If the Russian Ambassador to Mexico should come to Washington on a private visit and give out an interview telling us what we must do about providing Japan with scrap iron and aviation gasoline, we should invite him to leave the country immediately.

All that can be said in extenuation is that almost all our amateur diplomats in Europe have shared Mr. Cudahy's illusion that an Ambassador is entitled to have a personal foreign policy which he announced from time to time, and that he is entitled to take part not only in American politics but in the politics of the country to which he is accredited. Our trained diplomats know better and do not go in for this sort of thing. Mr. Phillips in Rome, Mr. Grew in Tokyo, Mr. Gordon at The Hague, Mr. Atherton in Copenhagen, to name the most conspicuous ones, have been in every respect a credit to this country. But in almost every case, not every one, the untrained rich amateurs have managed sooner or later to get themselves and the country into some kind of trouble.

THE REASON for this is that, being untrained and lacking discipline, they do not know the pitfalls of the diplomat and they do not know the rules of behavior which experience has shown are necessary. Usually they think they represent the President personally rather than the United States Government. Then they form personal attachments in the foreign country so that after a while they are no longer acting as ambassadors to the government but rather as liaison agents with certain politicians who are temporarily in power. How, for example, was it the business of Mr. Kennedy to give out interviews about the war, or of Mr. Cromwell to make speeches in Canada about the war, or of Mr. Bullitt to be the partisan of M. Daladier and then to issue statements about the Petain government, or of Mr. Cudahy to take sides publicly as between the King of the Belgians and his ministers? No one has heard of such going on among our trained diplomats, and surely the time has come either to put an end to them among the amateurs or to get rid of the amateurs.

The fact of the matter is that it is no longer safe to use these amateurs in the critical diplomatic posts. We should be far better off if we had another Grew in London and another Phillips in France, that is to say men professionally trained to keep themselves unentangled, to control their feelings, and to avoid making a personal career out of a diplomatic mission. Occasionally, to be sure, a specially qualified outsider can be used effectively for a special mission. The two best examples are Ambassador Morrow's mission to Mexico and Mr. Myron Taylor's mission to the Vatican. But these are the exceptions which prove the rule that the best diplomats are the professionally trained diplomats. For only through training do men learn to discipline their personal weaknesses.

Canadian Air Force Reported Swelled By Americans

Ottawa, Aug. 9 (AP).—Several thousand Americans were unofficially reported today to have joined with the Canadian air force here and in England as pilots, observers, air gunners, mechanics and instructors.

The national defense department said it could not provide any figures, because until recently every man enlisting in Canadian forces had to say he was a British subject and had to take the oath of allegiance. Since this stipulation was dropped there was a spurt of enlistments for the air force.

It was reported unofficially that 100 Americans were in the first division of ground troops to go overseas, and the air force is far more popular with Americans than the army.

With the same proportion throughout the Canadian active service force, however, there would be around 1,000 Americans in the army alone.

Clearing Up A Misunderstanding

LAST MONTH, before an audience at Odessa, N. Y., the writer of this column engaged in an exchange of views with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. The subject was the American Youth Congress, the relation of Mrs. Roosevelt to it, and the influence of Communists in it. The debate moved Mrs. Roosevelt to write, later, in her newspaper column:

"Although I have made it a rule never to speak at a bipartisan meeting, or to enter into debates, I enjoyed this occasion. I was particularly grateful to my delightful opponent because he gave me an opportunity to bring out many things which I would not otherwise have thought of saying. The only thing which troubled me was an accusation by my opponent against the Dies Committee. He said this Congressional committee, charged with the duty of investigation for the protection of the people of the United States, had been influenced by my attendance at two of their hearings. It was asserted that the committee had, therefore, not said as strongly as it might otherwise have the things in which it really believed. I cannot for a minute entertain the thought that a Congressional committee, headed by patriotic Mr. Martin Dies, would put consideration for any woman, no matter to whom she might be married, ahead of duty to the Nation as a whole."

MRS. ROOSEVELT'S designation of me as a "delightful opponent" gives me pleasure, naturally. But I fear that in achieving delightfulness I may have sacrificed plain speaking. My recollection of what I said does not completely coincide with Mrs. Roosevelt's understanding. I was not making "an accusation against the Dies Committee." The accusation was against Mrs. Roosevelt. I hope I now make myself clear.

The incident referred to occurred last year. There had been charges that the American Youth Congress contained a Communist element. Communist leaders, including Mr. Earl Browder, had publicly asserted, whether truthfully or not, that Communists were the basic influence in the Youth Congress.

These allegations came to the attention of the Dies Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities. The committee called officers and members of the Youth Congress to testify.

AT THIS POINT, the wife of the President did an unusual thing. She invited six of the Youth Congress leaders to be guests at the White House while they were in Washington to testify. Still more extraordinary, Mrs. Roosevelt announced that she would herself attend the sessions of the committee at which the Youth Congress witnesses were to be questioned.

Mrs. Roosevelt's motive is a thing within her own mind, only to be inferred from her actions and the circumstances. A common interpretation was that Mrs. Roosevelt wished to give moral support to the Youth Congress; and to show disapproval of the Dies Committee, even perhaps disdain for it. This interpretation of Mrs. Roosevelt's motive was borne out by the actions of the youths whom she was mothering. Their attitude was distinctly one of defiance of the Dies Committee, derision of it. They delivered to the committee a set of resolutions, one of which read, "Resolved that the Dies Committee be discontinued immediately." According to a newspaper account, one of the youths, in the presence of the committee and of Mrs. Roosevelt, sang a jeering ditty:

If you see an un-American
Just alkalize with Martin Dies,
and he will disappear.

The youths would hardly have done these things, in the presence of Mrs. Roosevelt, and while they were guests at the White House, unless they felt confident she sympathized with their attitude.

SUBSEQUENTLY, January 3, this year, the Dies Committee issued a report on the Youth Congress. The report was very mild. In part it read:

"The Young Communist League . . . is affiliated with the American Youth Congress; and testimony has been presented to the committee to indicate that this minority group has at times exerted an influence on the American Youth Congress out of all proportion to its size. The committee is unable to see how it is possible for this or any other organization of American young people, claiming to preserve and vitalize the American institutions and life of America, to expect to promote that work by including within its ranks those who do not believe in democracy, but in a contrary philosophy of life and form of government."

The mildness of that Dies Committee report, I am informed, was due to consideration for Mrs. Roosevelt's interest in the Youth Congress. I am informed that members of the committee had strong convictions about the Youth Congress, but felt restrained from expressing them by a spirit of courtesy toward the wife of the President. On this showing, it would seem that:

A committee of Congress went out of its way to show consideration for the wife of the President. But—

THE WIFE of the President went out of her way to show lack of consideration for a committee of Congress.

This, in the judgment of the present writer, was regrettable. It was regrettable from every standpoint—private taste, public interest, the proper conduct of Government.

(Mrs. Roosevelt, in the debate at Odessa, gave an explanation of her action. She said, as I understood her, that several months before the Dies Committee called the Youth Congress officials to testify, certain members of the committee had publicly expressed criticism of the Youth Congress. This, Mrs. Roosevelt said, justified her in conspicuously taking the side of the youths.)

The statements here made are set down with especial care. If there are errors, this writer will be glad to be corrected. The incident may turn out to have importance in history.

'Campaign Books'

Martin Charges Hatch Violation

THE "CAMPAIGN BOOK" carrying paid advertising, which netted the Democratic Party about $400,000 in 1936, made its comeback as a political issue yesterday when Edward J. Flynn, new Democratic Party chairman, announced the party would sell the books again this year "with more advertising than usual."

Immediately Representative Martin, G. O. P. chairman, charged the Democrats with a flagrant violation of the Hatch Act.

"The Democratic Committee blandly announces it will disregard these laws," Martin observed in a statement to the press only two hours after Flynn, with Democratic Publicity Director Charles Michelson at his elbow, had told a press conference that the Democrats would sell books again this election year, at 25 cents a copy.

REPRESENTATIVE Martin reminded the Democrats that the Hatch Act, signed by the President August 2, forbids purchase of "any goods, commodities, advertising or articles of any kind or description" where the proceeds directly or indirectly "inure to the benefit of or for any candidate for an elective Federal office."

Flynn was also reminded—by reporters at his press conference—that Attorney General Jackson came out this week against the sale of campaign books. Flynn and Michelson insisted, nevertheless, that the sale of these books was not illegal.

Attorney General Jackson wrote Monday, in a letter to Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, author of the "clean politics" bill:

"It is the sellers who systematically plan such devices and bring pressure on buyers to subscribe. If we are to be successful in going before juries to punish those who buy, we must also be authorized to include in the proceedings those who sell."

JACKSON'S LETTER embodied indorsement of legislation to plug loopholes in the Hatch Act that were pointed out by Henry P. Fletcher, Republican general counsel.

One such loophole was the language that makes it illegal under the clean politics law to buy a campaign book but carries no penalty for those who sell the books.

Flynn's revival of the campaign book that enlivened political arguments during and after the 1936 elections, also revived the arguments.

Questioned about the books, Flynn told reporters that he had learned from a Chicago Times editorial of August 2 that a committe in Elwood, Ind., was selling advertising at $1,000 a page for a booklet to be distributed at the notification ceremonies for Wendell Willkie in that town later this month.

The committee was called the Elwood Notification Committee Willkie-for-President.

CHAIRMAN MARTIN lost no time in replying that this charge by Flynn "is absolutely untrue and without any basis in fact."

"Neither the Elwood notification committee, nor any other Republican group supporting Willkie is soliciting advertising in any kind of book or publication," the Massachusetts legislator said.

He said an "unauthorized" group had solicited advertising for such a booklet, using "my name as honorary chairman," but they were quickly disowned by the Republican National Committee, and continued their project on a purely commercial basis.

THE DEMOCRATS have signed up advertising for this years' issue of their campaign book to the amount of $140,650.

This appeared yesterday to be a source of some comfort to Flynn, who did not disguise his concern over Democratic Party finances.

"Our trouble is getting money for a campaign," Flynn said. "All the sources of money are in Republicon hands."

When a correspondent pointed out that the Democrats had no trouble collecting funds in 1936, the year they received $500,000 from John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers union, Flynn replied:

"But in 1936 the Republicans did not have a public utility man for a candidate."

DIGGING his teeth into the "public utility issue, Flynn charged that "the Republican money is coming from the same source that organized the telegrams in Philadelphia."

This was a reference to reports that just prior to the nomination of Willkie in Philadelphia a great many telegrams of similar wording were delivered to Republican delegates.

Royalston Mass., Aug. 9.—Any New Englander worth his salt will tell you that "blueberry slump" is a dish fit for a king. This homely dessert, made of the blueberries that grow wild over this countryside, and of rich, sweetened biscuit dough, is already a favorite of the former Empress Zita of Austria-Hungary.

Those other local dishes fit for a king, a New England boiled dinner and a New England fish chowder, are anticipated with pleasure as soon as the weather cools off sufficiently for such piping hot victuals. The royal refugees have already had their initiation with that great all-American delicacy, corn on the cob.

In these small ways and in many, many others, the former Empress and her children are trying to do in America as Americans do. And, from all appearances, loving it.

If there is a trace of a shadow cast about the woman who once ruled over one of the most magnificent courts in history, it is too faint to discern. Certainly the scenery in this region is fit for a queen, but in other respects no community could be less royal—with the exception of its name—than this in which the former Empress is now at home.

No Shadow of a Royal Court

Royalston is scarcely a wide spit in the meandering road, between big old trees, that wanders off toward the hills. There is only a village store, and that is Royalston. It is 5 miles into Athol to the nearest picture show and five-and-ten store.

This is no community in which to set up even the shadow of a royal court. The lovely, white New England house, surrounded by a low, white paling fence in which the former Empress lives with her children is on Maine street, Royalston's only street. There is no guard around, and one goes up the flag walk and rings the doorbell unchallenged.

The door is opened immediately, but never by a liveried footman in gold braid and knee britches, or even by a butler, for the household supports neither. Sometimes it is opened by a pleasant, gray-haired man who is Count Henry Degenfeld, aide to the young archdukes. At other times it is opened by Countess Therese Kerssenbrock, a plump, good-natured middle-aged woman, who is lady-in-waiting.

Countess Kerssenbrock and Count Degenfeld are the only persons in the household who could be even remotely regarded as a "royal entourage."

Nothing Formal

When neither the countess nor the count are handy, the front door is swung wide by Mrs. Johnson, the Royalston woman who has come in to keep house for the royal refugees, or by the only other two members of the household, a general maid and a cook.

There is nothing formal about the service in this household. While the Empress was receiving me in the drawing room, there came a discreet knock at the door. Then the door popped open, the maid stuck her head through and announced luncheon without coming into the room and without further ado.

There are always three or four tennis racquets on the table in the hallway. The three archduchesses as well as the young archduke love tennis. They are also delighted to find a golf course in their back yard. It, like the house in which they live, belongs to the New York banker, Calvin Bullock, who lives in another big white house directly across the street. The young members of the household are delighted, too, with the number of swimming holes in the vicinity. The former Empress encourages her children in all their outdoor activities, although she does not share in them.

Her daughters, the Archduchess Adelaide, 26; Charlotte, 19, and Elizabeth, 18, all look extremely young for their ages. They are sweet, shy girls without a trace of sophistication, with no makeup and dressed with a Spartan simplicity.

Like their mother, they wear cotton hose. Those worn by the blond, blue-eyed Archduchess Elizabeth today were neatly darned in a half-dozen small places across her instep.

Public School Preferred

Archduchess Adelaide, her mother said with pride, already has her doctorate from Louvain University. She spent two years doing social settlement work and teaching in Vienna before the Nazi putsch. The Archduchess added shyly that she would like to visit the Settlement House in New York, of which she has heard so much.

The Archduchesses Elizabeth, who is not quite through high school, and Charlotte, who is a sophomore in college; Archduke Rudolph, 20, and Archduke Karl Ludwig, 22, will attend American schools this autumn, preferably public schools. The Empress has visited one American school, Williams College, and found it delightful. Archduke Felix, 23, will set out again upon the lecture tour for which he first came to America about a year ago. Archduke Otto will continue his work with Austrian and Hungarian refugees.

The former Empress and her family realize that once more they have but a temporary home.

This quiet haven, where they are at peace among the New England hills, is a summer home. The Empress does not know just where she and her family will spend the winter, or even how. They will be in America, and in a land so beautiful and amid people who are so kind life somehow will be good, she feels.

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

Country Editor

TWENTY YEARS AGO a New Bedford boy, New York-educated, married a Pennsylvania girl, and together they bought a paper with a circulation of 600 on an island off the coast of Massachusetts. The Vineyard Gazette sells 2,700 copies a week now, and the Houghs are still at it. How the paper grew, and still more, how Henry and Betty Hough grew into the life of Marthas Vineyard, is the stuff in which Henry Beetle Hough's "Country Editor" (Doubleday, $3) is made.

Becoming a country editor is one of the great American dreams. Every big city's reporting staff is made up of would-be country editors who couldn't make the grade. They drifted into the metropolises, and sometimes they write fine homesick stories about the job they'd like to have done. They almost never go back. When they do, their clothes and their accents and their writing aren't right. They feel strange; they don't belong. Some of the more prosperous buy farms and, while the barns are collapsing, earn a living writing books about the joys of country life. Most of the boys and girls remain, cheerfully rootless, in the cities . . . But Henry Hough gave up his job as public relations counselor to a hundred-million-dollar corporation, went back to the home of his grandparents, and made good. He knows the big city and he prefers the small town; his writing seems to be built of the same solid material as his office desk: sound applewood.

It isn't a "typical" story. Most country newspapers are edited, as a side line to job-printing shops, by native sons who still hope to make good and get away. Perhaps one reason they don't get away is that they are proud of the syndicated "boiler-plate" material with which they fill their papers, hoping thus to make them look like minor versions of big city newspapers. Henry Beetle Hough threw out the boiler-plate, sold the job-printing sideline, and devoted himself to the business of expressing life on Marthas Vineyard.

Marthas Vineyard isn't typical, either. It is a proud old whaling and fishing community, which remains moderately proud of its Indian reservation and recognizes dark-skinned Portuguese among its oldest inhabitants. (Some of Mr. Hough's best stories are of John Bent, gardener, grocer and artist, who was born in Lisbon, and liked to cut pictures in watermelon rinds with his thumbnail). For a time the island was a great summer headquarters for religious revivalists; latterly its summer colony runs to other extremes. The Gazette covers them all; to it an islander, winter or summer, is an islander, though it has no relish for visitors who arriving in early June, look about and say "Why, there's not a soul here yet."

THE GAZETTE has had four editors in its 94 years. The first was a fire-eating Democrat who denounced his enemies as "supreme, defiant, splendid liars" and hailed what he understood to be the victory of Tilden in 1876 with the headline "Blow Ye the Trumpet! The Eagle Screams Over a Land Redeemed From Misrule and Corruption" . . . His successor, as unreconciled a Republican, wrote on giving up his job, that the "editorial couch" was "plentifully studded with thorns . . . not great, jagged tenpenny spikes that let daylight through the victim . . . but little pricks and splinters and needles and pins that fret and harass and annoy, but are not big enough even to mention."

From the third editor, "Mr. Sampson," Henry Hough happily learned his trade. Mr. Sampson, when the Houghs took over his paper, wrote in pencil, as he had always written, and set in type with his own hands, a valedictory which every page of "Country Editor" echoes: "We have loved the paper and the work it has imposed upon us."

The Gazette has paid for its new linotype and for its web press. It is better printed and better edited than it was, but it is still, devoutly, a country newspaper. Whether or not Mr. Hough is right in his faith that "the formula of mass circulation and mass advertising is self-limiting" and that there will be more, and more individual, rather than fewer, and more stereotyped, newspapers in future, his book is heartening evidence that as a country editor he has lived a good life in a good town. He has lived where the run of alewives or of bluefish, a flicker astray in an editor's bedroom, the blooming of lilacs, and the spring herald of the "pinkletinks" (Vineyardese for spring peepers) are all news in the newspaper as well as in the lives of men and women. He likes salty characters, but I think no Vineyarder will find in his book any quaint writing to resent. The book is old, small-town American; between chuckles it breathes an honest sea-island serenity.

Britain Will Use Hughes' Fast Plane

New York, Aug. 9 (AP).—Howard Hughes' famous "flying laboratory" in which he flashed around the world two years ago to set a globe-encircling record, left Los Angeles tonight heading for a wartime mission of courier service between London and Egypt.

It was bought several days ago for an undisclosed sum, sources here said, by the British purchasing commission.

Norway's Princess, Due Soon, Likes Simplicity

Washington Society Need Not Practice Up On Curtsies; Royal Exile Made Pleasing Impression on Visit Here Last Summer

It will not be necessary for local residents to practice up on their curtsies for the forthcoming arrival of Crown Princess Martha, of Norway. The Princess probably will prefer a minimum of social life for the present, and, as a matter of fact, likes simplicity anyway. Before the war she and her husband, Crown Prince Olav, spent most of their time on their estate, Skaugum, in the hills outside Bergen.

Local residents met the royal couple last summer at a large reception given in their honor at the Norwegian Legation. The charming Princess so intrigued the guests that they managed to forget for a while that it was just about the hottest day so far that season.

During their tour of the United States the couple spent several days at Hyde Park, and President and Mrs. Roosevelt are taking a personal interest in the return of Princess Martha.

Princess Made First Speech Here

During her Washington stay, the tall, slender Princess made the first speech of her life at a gathering of local newspaper women. Her husband gave about 60 between here and the West Coast. The couple visited the National parks, Eastern cities and Middle-western towns where there are large Norwegian settlements. The Crown Prince enjoyed one of his favorite sports, yachting, off the North Shore of Massachusetts.

The Swedish legation here will be interested in the coming of Crown Princess Martha, as she is the niece of King Gustaf, of Sweden. She has been at the royal castle in Stockholm since fleeing Oslo. Her husband is in London with King Haakon and other members of the Norwegian government.

Three-year-old Prince Harald, who will accompany his mother, is the first prince born in Norway since 1370, and the Norwegians want his safety assured. The couple have two other children, Princess Ragnhild and Princess Astrid. The latter is named after the late Queen of the Belgians, who was Princess Martha's sister.

After her home and family, arts and crafts are the chief interests of Princess Martha. Her husband was born in England and is a first cousin of King George VI. His mother, the late Queen Maud, was a sister of the late King George V.

Third Royal Group To Come to U. S.

The Princess is coming here in response to an invitation from the American Government. Besides the royal party, the liner "American Legion" will bring several hundred American refugees.

The distinguished Norwegians are the third royal group to come to this country to escape the war. Former Empress Zita and her six children, and Prince Consort Felix of Luxembourg and his six children caused speculation on their arrival as to whether most of the royalty of the world won't end up in Washington. It was rumored that Princess Juliana of the Netherlands, now in Canada, might pay us a visit, but legation officials deny this.

Voters League Plans Schools

In one-day campaign schools designed "to fortify democracy," the League of Women Voters in 31 States and 600 local communities will study the "representative function in democracy," "political parties," and the "conduct of foreign policy." Party platforms, campaign speeches, league experience in promoting Federal legislation, articles on the general problems as well as the usual textbooks will be used in the schools to be held between now and November.

As explained by Miss Margaret M. Wells, national league president, the discussion in the schools is planned to build up confidence in democratic institutions through understanding of them.

Declaring that the surest safeguard of democratic institutions is "a calm and clear conviction that our fate hangs upon us as individual citizens," Miss Wells assured the State leagues that "after such a discussion as proposed in these schools, not a citizen but will understand better what he has to do and how to do it. Such understanding will inspire confidence. It may inspire a sense of importance. That is what we need today." She also warned the leagues that "during this year's political campaign, because we are a democracy, many ignorant and prejudiced things will be said, as well as many honest and earnest things. Never has it been more important that we listen and evaluate, that we make mature judgments and promote helpful discussions."

South Americans Leave New York For Homelands

Several South American delegates to the Havana conference sailed from New York last night on the liner Argentina for their homelands. Dr. Leopoldo Melo, head of the Argentine delegation; Senora de Melo, their son, Dr. George Melo, and Dr. Mauricio de Nabuco, chairman of the Brazilian delegation, were among those embarking. All visited Washington earlier this week.

Dr. Oscar Schnake, Chilean Minister for Development, who was at the embassy here for several days, has gone to New York, but will return shortly for another visit.

Miss Marsh, who has long made her home with her uncle here on Belmont road, recently returned from a trip to California and has just joined her uncle in Narragansett, where they have summered for many seasons.

Mr. Jenkins has made his home in Warrenton for some years and is a well-known member of the hunt country set. He was recently divorced in Reno.

Dutch Legation To Honor Raemaekers

Famous Cartoonist, Wife to Be Guests At Dinner August 22

The first engraved invitations to be seen around these parts since the hot weather set in were delivered yesterday to about 150 Washingtonians. They are from the Netherlands Minister and Mme. Loudon and bid guests to a buffet dinner on Thursday evening, August 22, at the legation.

Guests of honor will be the celebrated Dutch cartoonist, Louis Raemaekers, and Mrs. Raemaekers. Their arrival for a brief stay at the legation is the signal for the first sizable party to be given there since the invasion of Holland.

Came to U. S. After Invasion

Mr. Raemaekers, whose name became famous all over the world during the last war, came to the United States after his country fell last spring. He is now doing his celebrated caricatures for the New ork Herald Tribune.

The son of a Dutch country editor, Mr. Raemaekers started out as a landscape artist, no better or worse than dozens of others. In 1910 he got a job as cartoonist on the Amsterdam Telegraf, but his work caused no stir whatsoever. It wasn't until the Germans invaded Belgium, in 1914, and he did a drawing called "Christendom After 20 Centuries," that the public began to take notice.

There followed a whole series of indicting work by the artist, depicting the sufferings of Belgium under the German regime. The Dutch government, which was doing its best to maintain some soft of neutrality, ordered Raemaekers arrested and tried, but by that time he had whipped up public sentiment to such a pitch that the jury acquitted him.

Critic Discovered Raemaeker's' Genius

Later on in the war Raemaekers went to London, where he exhibited his work. An English art critic was so taken by it that he named Raemaekers a genius, and from that time on the gallery was packed. Later the cartoonist came to America to hold exhibits, and while here did a series for a newspaper syndicate.

The Minister and Mme. Loudon have been here most of the summer, with the exception of brief trips to Marion, Mass., where their baby daughter is staying with Mrs. Candler Cobb, mother of Mme. Loudon.

Girls Shop For Lighthouse

Three girls in search of a lighthouse for sale will leave August 17 on a tour of the rocky coast of Maine.

One of them is Miss Florence Berryman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Berryman, of Washington. Now summering in Vermont, she will be joined by two of her friends and they will set off to find an abandoned white light tower. All three work—Miss Berryman is a magazine writer—and want some place where they can get away from it all.

Before leaving Washington they did extensive research with the Geodetic Survey and the Treasury Department on the abandoned lighthouse situation. The Government is building new electrified ones, which don't require that the keeper live in them, so consequently there are a lot of old ones for sale. But the demand exceeds the supply—the Government has on record the names of about 400 people who want to live in a lighthouse.

Mary Arnold Back From Attending Two House Parties

William W. Arnold, member of the United States Board of Tax Appeals, and Mrs. Arnold have been joined in their apartment at the Wardman Park Hotel by their daughter, Miss Mary Alice Arnold, who has been on two house parties, one in upper Pennsylvania and the other at Rehoboth Beach.

Their son, William B. Arnold, a young lawyer practicing in Robinson, Ill., who has many friends here, will arrive tomorrow to spend his vacation with his parents. On Wednesday Mr. and Mrs. Arnold and their two children will go to Cape May, N. J., for the remainder of August.

Two D. C. Girls Going to Newport

Two of Washington's glamour girls, the Misses Eleanor Flood and Peggy Townsend, will be in Newport over Tennis Week. They will be guests of Mrs. Frederick Mitchell Gold, of New York and Washington.

Miss Townsend and her mother, Mrs. Effingham Townsend, are now in New York. Miss Flood will join them there and Mrs. Townsend will go to Long Island to visit friends while her daughter is in Newport.

Second Daughter Born To Clyde C. Gurleys

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Courtney Gurley are receiving congratulations upon the birth of a daughter, Courtney, born Thursday at the Columbia Hospital.

She is the Gurleys' second daughter, the first being named Jocelyn Newbold Gurley. Mrs. Gurley is the former Miss Cynthia Newbold.

The Hunt Country

By Nina Carter Tabb

OF INTEREST to the hunting country was the announcement of the engagement of Miss Mary Selden Kennedy to Allan Royal Moulton, made yesterday by her mother, Mrs. Anthony K. Kennedy, of Warrenton.

The bride-elect was graduated from the Warrenton Country School and made her debut in Virginia two years ago at a party given by her mother. She also attended many large parties in Washington, Baltimore and Richmond during that season.

Mr. Moulton was graduated from the University of Miami and is now engaged in the insurance business in Washington.

NO EXACT DATE has been set for the wedding but it will take place in the fall in Warrenton. Miss Kennedy, a tall, lovely brunette, is one of the most popular girls of the younger set in Virginia. Her grandparents were the late Admiral and Mrs. Stephen Dandridge Kennedy, of Cassilis, Warrenton. They came to Virginia many years ago from Annapolis, Md., to make their home. Admiral Kennedy, in his youth, lived at T' Bower, the lovely Dandridge home in Jefferson County, W. Va., near Charles Town. Mrs. Kennedy was the former Mary Selden.

ADMIRAL KENNEDY at the close of the Civil War resigned from the Navy only to re-enter it two years later. In 1880 he was promoted to the post of medical inspector where he remained until 1882. After continuing private practice for a while he retired and came to Warrenton to live. Miss Kennedy's father, the late Anthony K. ("Tone") Kennedy, was born in his parent's former home, The Cave, in Jefferson County. Her mother was the former Miss Lucy Pendleton White, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Miss Kennedy is a niece of Mrs. William Beverley Mason, of this city. Mrs. John Caswell, of Washington, is her first cousin.

Many parties and showers are planned in Warrenton for Miss Kennedy and Mr. Moulton. Mrs. Caswell will entertain at a cocktail party for her cousin and later in the season Mrs. Mason will give a party in her honor.

MRS. MONCURE NELSON LYON entertained members of the Fauquier and Loudoun Garden Club at her home, Black Oak Ridge, near Purcellville on Wednesday afternoon. Guests arrived at 5 o'clock bringing exhibits of "Gardens Best flowers" which were judged first, second and third. Mrs. Albert White, of Waterford, won the ribbons.

After a short business meeting which was presided over by Mrs. Nathanial H. Morison, a paper was read by Mrs. Samuel Marshall. Following that a nature guessing game was played at which Mrs. Thomas Atkinson won first place, Mrs. J. Mackenzie Tabb, second and Mrs. A. D. Pollock Gilmour, Mrs. George Slater and Mrs. Albert White tied for third. A delicious buffet supper was served at tables arranged on the lawn.

Other guests at the party were Mrs. Thomas U. Dudley, Mrs. A. C. Marshall, Mrs. Thomas Fendall, Mrs. Charles F. Harrison, Mrs. Henry T. Oxnard, Mrs. Edmund Rust, Mrs. Armstead Welboun, Mrs. Samuel Marshall, Miss Lilias Janney, Mrs. H. Gordon Moore and Mrs. Peter B. Wood.

THE FAUQUIER-LOUDOUN Polo Club sent a team to Ligonier, Pa., on Friday to play in a tournament at the Rolling Rock Club. The teams played yesterday and will continue today and tomorrow. The Virginia club sent a team by the invitation of Richard K. Mellon. A tournament is being held for the benefit of the "Allies War Relief Fund." Other polo clubs that sent teams are the Philadelphia Club, Meadowbrook Club, Gates Mill Club and Burnt Mill Club.

The usual Sunday afternoon game played on Phipps Goose Creek Field will not be played tomorrow.

The forty-first annual Warrenton Horse Show will be held this year on Saturday, August 31, and Monday, September 2. Francis T. Greene, of Warrenton, has been elected manager in Mr. Gaskins' place. Mr. Greene is a well-known horseman and steeplechase rider. The Warrenton Association lost another veteran officer about two years ago when Julian C. Keith resigned as president. He was presented by the association with a silver pitcher. Mr. Keith was succeeded by J. North Fletcher, who was then secretary. At that time, Mrs. Hamilton, Mr. Keith's daughter was elected a director at the annual meeting, the first woman to be chosen by the Warrenton Association. Premium lists for the coming two-day show are just off the press and will be mailed out to hundreds of prospective exhibitors this week.

War Changing Beauty Ideals Of English

By Marshall Adams
The Post Fashion Editor

THE WAR has changed English ideals of beauty with the Duchess of Kent taking a sharp drop in popularity and the Duchess of Gloucester mounting in public favor, according to Erno Laszlo.

MARSHALL ADAMS

Dr. Laszlo, famed continental beauty specialist familiar with London society, asserts that the chic, carefully groomed Duchess of Kent is a bit too conscious of fashion for the war-time British taste. The calm, strong sturdiness of the Duchess of Gloucester is more to the liking of the populace, especially since her beauty tastes are quiet and in tune with economic conditions. She wears no rouge, a habit now followed by the majority of English women. Fresh, natural good looks, in place of studied glamour, typified by this hitherto retiring member of the British reigning family, is the ne worder of the day, says Dr. Laszlo, now conducting beauty research in New York.

Must Look Competent

Apparently English women like to feel, too, that the feminine head of one of the ruling families looks competent in uniform rather than "fascinating" or "photogenic."

In fact, the average upper class British woman today wears her inevitable uniform over a figure 10 to 15 pounds heavier than it has ever been, according to Dr. Laszo, he observes that "the first World War brought in the boyish figure while in this war-to-the-finish the women want to look, and be, healthy, energetic and capable." Determined to raise her health and vitality to its highest peak, the Britisher has for the last several months openly scorned the slimming regimes she formerly followed and has gone in for three square meals a day. These include staples like bread and potatoes—staples the Englishwoman fervently hopes will not be denied her during the war—figure or no figure.

Styles for Morale

Reports came through yesterday from abroad that England is also trying to "regain its stout upper lip" by means of regular fall fashion showings in war-conscious London. New fall topcoats and suits shown in Bond street are warm, sturdy fleece affairs, mostly in white for air raid precautions and often hooded for weather protection and as a means of doing away with extraneous headgear. Despite the workmanlike nature of these clothes, however, there has been a plucky attempt on the part of English designers to make them dashing and becoming.

The New and Old Types of British Charm

The Duchess of Gloucester, wife of the third son of the late King George, is reported as typifying the new ideal of British beauty guaged by war-time standards. Her cocky, determined features are seen below in the uniform of the St. John Ambulance Brigade when she recently took the place of Queen Elizabeth as colonel in chief. The handsome soignee Duchess of Kent (right) has had a decline in popularity with the populace

Few Easy Tricks Will Flavor Up Campfire Meals

Who says campfire meals can't please the most "persnickety!" If you flavor up the food with a few easy tricks—have a good bed of embers—and stick to things that require about the same length of cooking time, you'll hear no complaints—not even from the pet fussbudget of the party.

There's no need to have the skill of a scout to build an adequate campfire. But it helps if you can clear away a shallow indentation in the ground, and surround it on three sides with stones, earth or sand, so that a grille can be placed across the top. Wait until the flames have been reduced to glowing coals before you try to cook anything on it.

Take along at least one old-fashioned, long-handled wire toaster (if you have two, one can be used for toasting bread or rolls while the other does duty broiling cube steaks, frankfurters or hamburger patties.) A long-handled fork and a frying pan are also important tools of your equipment.

Spa Treatment Benefit Due to Routine Life

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

IS THERE any advantage in a vacation at a resort for mineral springs or can't you do as much good taking to the great open spaces?

Spa treatment seems to have more or less gone out of fashion and undeservedly so. It used to be the regular thing for the family to vacation at the springs—now the regular thing is to get in the automobile and ride, ride, ride.

It certainly can be said, in general, that the ride-ride-ride vacation is best suited to young and vigorous members of the family. It's likely to make the older ones need a little time to rest to recover from their vacation. They can have a good, restful, healthy spell at the springs though.

Beneficial Routine

When you get down to analyze the good that mineral springs do, you must acknowledge that the routine life imposed on you at a spa is of more value than the waters. All good spas now have arrangements for baths, dietary regulation, exercise and massage, and competent medical consultation is available to outline a proper daily routine.

This treatment is of value in chronic disabling conditions including those affecting the heart and circulation, rheumatism, digestive-chronic stomach, intestinal and gallbladder conditions, nervous and occasionally, skin troubles.

Different mineral waters are of value because of their alkaline properties, salts of calcium or phosphate, mild laxative properties, iron content or natural heat. Whether the minute amounts of radium some of them contain do any good is doubtful.

Water as a Cathartic

In thinking of natural cathartics we stress the value of roughage foods and give no attention to the claims of plain, good old-fashioned water.

Water—six to eight glasses a day, more in summertime—is necessary for the maintenance of the equilibrium of the body. As a cathartic it initiates the peristaltic movements of the intestine gently and naturally. Water immediately leaves the stomach and as soon as it reaches the intestine it stimulates the intestinal muscle to movement.

This is the reason for the good effect of a glass or two of hot water drunk in the early morning before breakfast. They should be taken slowly while dressing.

Egyptian Cloths

It seems that we moderns aren't so smart after all. At least, the Egyptians have left us linen mummy cloth so fine that the machine hasn't yet been able to duplicate its delicacy and texture. One piece made in about 2500 B. C. has 540 warp threads to the square inch, while the best modern manufacturers can do has been around 350 threads to the inch.

By JEAN BROWNELL

HELEN TRAUBEL, who sings Sunday at the Water Gate, is proof that one can be born in America, study in America and still make the Metropolitan Opera. A native of St. Louis, she never has been out of this country. Her first break came when she was 12 and her mother, soprano soloist in a church choir, became ill. Miss Traubel took her place in the emergency—and was given her mother's job. Her ultimate goal always was the Metropolitan stage, even if she did no more than carry a spear.

Helen Traubel

After winning considerable success as a concert artist, she heard Marian Anderson and detected enviable qualities in the Negro contralto's voice. So she retired for two years to study under Miss Anderson's teacher. The result was a Town Hall debut and appearances on the Ford Sunday Evening Hour and with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. At last the Metropolitan was sufficiently impressed to offer her a contract. Not only did she NOT have to carry a spear, but she was given her choice of roles for her operatic debut.

You don't have to be a music critic to appreciate one of Miss Traubel's feats. The day of her Ford Hour audition she awoke to find herself covered from head to foot with poison ivy infection. But mind triumphed over discomfort. While she was singing, N. B. C.'s musical director entered the studio, listened a moment and then asked, "Who's playing the Flagstad records?

Once mannerisms and other results of faulty training have been swept away, they will take up pantomime. Then there will be acrobatics to improve carriage and body control. "After all," she points out, "if you are going to fall on the stage, as in a death scene, it is important to know just what your body is going to do." Miss Ley is impressed by the amount of talent in this country and by the degree to which it lies dormant. "You must learn here that you may be a stenographer or a housewife and yet be an actress, too."

Are you the victim of horn-honkings and taunts of "Yah! Woman driver"? If so, heed the words of Dr. Edwin H. Silver, local optometrist, who has concluded after many tests that colored sun glasses can soothe the nervous motorist and stimulate the overcautious one. The jerky, impatient type of driver should go in for blue or violet goggles, Dr. Silver says; amber-tinted glasses speed up the reactions of the extremely slow person. In-between types will be most comfortable with a greenish lens. In any event, if you can't afford to have sun glasses ground and tinted to suit you, buy dime-store numbers with flat lenses. The curved type of cheap spectacles distorts the vision dangerously, according to Dr. Silver.

TIPS ON MARKETING
From the D. C. Department of Weights and Measures

A bad practice in some meat markets is to place the customer's purchase on the scale, remove it quickly and announce the price without stating the weight. Such practice causes many errors; it is responsible for many of the short-weight sales of meats and poultry. Consumers are urged to request the clerk to state the weight and, if necessary, insist upon his doing so. The weights and measures law even requires him to deliver a sales ticket stating the weight, if the customer demands it. Customers are rarely cheated by clerks who state the weight.

Single Color in Decoration May Be Effective

Right Balance Must Be Kept To Give Variety

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

IF YOU really feel personal and emotional about any special color, then we say go ahead and use it as lavishly as you like. Goodness knows, too many rooms depend on colors that no one could feel sentimental about, so it's no wonder the decorative effect is dreary.

And don't be afraid of using too much of any one color. You can't use too much, if you use it with the right balance. We have a friend whose home has green as a key color in every room. Another runs up and down the scale of blues for the color theme throughout her home, creating different effects in each room, though still blue. The effect of using one theme color throughout the house need not be monotonous, and it may bring a sense of unity and serenity.

Gamut of Purples

But the most interesting color adventures we've heard of lately were those of a cousin, who has a great love for all the amethyst, mauve, lavender and purple shades. Most of her decorator friends were afraid to see her go ahead quite so freely with those colors—after all, they are shadowy tones and might be gloomy . . . Oh, there were all sorts of reasons for being cautious about them. But our relative went ahead and the result was a charming small house, cheerful, distinctive, full of individuality.

In the living room the walls were covered in a toile de Jouy scenic fabric in mauve-on-white. This same material was used for the draperies and for part of the upholstery. A pair of chairs had covers in gold, raw silk. The rug in soft blue, the accessories in gold, and furniture of French provincial design completed the scene. The dining room adjoining had walls painted white, with white organdy curtains and the same blue carpet.

Varied Uses

Here, the purple note was introduced in a collection of interesting amethyst glass displayed on shelves, and on gold brackets, and lovely against the white walls. The dining chairs were slip-covered in the mauve-on-white toile de Jouy. One bedroom, with walls in robin's egg blue, had a lavender carpet, white curtains, spreads, bed canopy and chair covers were of a flowered chintz, with lavender and blues in the pattern. The other bedroom, with a lavender-flowered fall paper, and a plain green rug, had white organdie curtains, made full, and with wide ruffles and white chenille bedspreads.

Beauty Secrets

Posture Improvements

IF YOUR expensive dress doesn't have a dash of chic, look to your posture, advises Mathilda C. Messner, director of the department of corrective exercises at Battle Creek Sanitarium, Battle Creek, Mich.

Not all women can have the tall, willowy look of professional models. But regardless of whether your figure is short and stocky, tall and overly thin or just an average figure, you can improve your appearance by correcting posture defects. Keeping the toes straight ahead, the feet parallel, the lower abdomen in, not only can make your figure look 5 to 10 pounds lighter in weight, it also gives your body the rhythm and grace of movement needed to show off a dress to advantage, according to Miss Messner.

When the body is poised in a properly balanced line without muscular tension or rigidity, you do not tire easily. This makes you feel better generally and if you feel better, you look better, sums up Miss Messner.

"Malposture—slouchy, slovenly and ungraceful," said Miss Messner, in a recent interview, "not only detracts from a woman's beauty but often leads to reduced efficiency, lowered vitality and a prodisposition to diseases."

Mary Haworth's Mail

Should Wife Let Husband Live Alone in Strange City, While She Remains With Bereaved Father

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Recently my husband was notified that he is to be transferred by his firm to another city. I had planned to go right along with him, but last month my mother died, leaving my father very lonely, although a son and a married daughter and the latter's husband and two children live with him.

My husband, who is very fond of my father, has suggested that I put our furniture in storage and take our two children and go home to live with father, to keep him company. I seem to be his favorite daughter, as he doesn't get along very well with my sister, who has been living with him.

But I want to consider my husband, too. He plans to take a furnished room and come home week-ends, a distance of 100 miles. He says he wouldn't mind doing this, but just the same I think it would be a big sacrifice, as I know he loves to be with his children and hates to go out to restaurants for meals all the time and such.

I don't know whether to put my father or my husband first. After all, father has a son and daughter and grandchildren of his own already living with. And there is still another unmarried daughter who comes home once a week. I don't like to think of my husband living alone, 100 miles away from us. Please advise me where to go. M. C. M.

Beware of Taking Husband for Granted

DEAR M. C. M.: Your father doesn't need your companionship, in view of the size of the clan already assembled under his roof. And I imagine if you were to take the children and go back to live with him, pretty soon he would be as much on the outs with you as he is with your married sister who is already there.

Elderly persons would rather be left alone than overly-coddled, and I am sure that your father can and will (as all of us must) reconcile himself to the loss of one who was very dear to him—without his progeny swarming to the rescue like so many fire wagons responding to a five-alarm fire. Just give him a chance to get his breath and he'll be all right.

Furthermore, I venture to think that your husband's suggestion that you return to papa while he finds a furnished room for himself was not altogether altruistically inspired. Fond as he is of his father-in-law, his children and his wife, I surmise that your husband is wondering if it wouldn't be fun to get completely away and on his own, more or less, for a change. I don't mean that he is consciously calculating in such terms, or really trying to make a break—but I should guess that he isn't at all averse to the idea, at least on an experimental basis, and that he wouldn't be half as lonely or distrait as you anticipate.

So I think you had better "go right along with him," as you had previously planned, if you want to keep your marriage tooling placidly along on an even keel. And I would also suggest that you give some constructive thought to the possibility that you have been taking your husband too much for granted, and that you make a real effort from now on to find out "what makes him tick," so that you can become a companion so compatible and indispensable that he wouldn't dream of letting you go back to live indefinitely with father. M. H.

Preparing for College, Girl Faces Dilemma

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: This fall I am going away to a co-educational college. For two years, I have been dating a boy who lives near me. He wants me to promise that I will not have dates with any other boys while I am away. And he promises, in turn, that he will not date any other girl.

However, I feel that our respective situations will be entirely different. He has a job and he lives at home, which means that he can drift along in a pleasant, comfortable groove, with friends and amusements, even though he has no dates. But I will be living in a girls' dormitory, among strangers, most of whom will be "dating," and who will think I am queer if I stay away from boys all the time.

So how can I remain true to my boy friend here and yet not miss all the good times at college? I would appreciate your immediate advice in this dilemma. ANXIOUS.

Love Without Trust Isn't Worth Having

DEAR ANXIOUS: One can sympathize with your boy friend's emotions, even while recognizing the absurdity and even selfishness of his would-be bargain. But he must be man enough to let you try your own wings freely in the new milieu, while trusting to his own ability to hold his own against any field of competitors.

Thus, I think you should say "au revoir," when the time comes to do so, with the understanding that each is entitled, with the other's blessing, to lead a normal social life during the months you are separated, and with the further understanding that each of you sincerely intends to keep the other first in his heart and thoughts, regardless of how or with whom your days apart are spent.

This kind of arrangement is better guaranteed to let your adolescent love for each other develop gradually into a seasoned adult devotion, than the sort of proposition he proposes. I am sure you would find, in time, that his brand of bargain could not be kept; that one or the other of you would, sooner or later, guiltily break over. And that would mark the beginning of the end of the mutual trust and dependence you have thus far placed in each other. So my advice to you is to exhort him to "be big" about this thing, just as you expect to be; and to act jointly on the assumption that if your love is as important as you think it is, nothing and nobody can break the bond. M. H.

Beauty Secrets of Film Stars Based on Health, Relaxation

Eschewing Desserts, They Keep Figures Lovely a Long Time

By Ida Jean Kain

GOING to the movies is a real inspiration to me. So many of the most popular stars are past 30 and some of the best are well past 35!

They don't look it! They have beautiful figures, with willowy waists, slim hips, young arms and shoulders. Watching them on the screen, you might be inclined to give the credit to careful lighting and flattering make-up. But seeing them in person, you would be astonished at how young and fresh they really are.

The almanac declares that Claudette Colbert is 35, Irene Dunne is 37, and Norma Shearer is 37. Jeanette MacDonald, Joan Crawford and Myrna Loy are in their 30's.

They Have Their Own Ideas

Technically, it's none of our business how old the stars are, but we wouldn't be human if we didn't want to know their beauty methods. Every star I have met has her own individual ideas—and some of them are Spartan!—about taking care of her looks. But the fundamental thing with all of them is health.

All are diet conscious, but they wisely steer clear of food fads. Their menus are based on the protective foods and, to keep the calories down, they do not indulge in desserts, even occasionally. Miss Shearer once told me that she dislikes doing to dinners where so many courses are served. She doesn't like that much food at one meal. And right there is is anxellent tip for any woman who wants to keep slim in the middle! Never eat until you get that "full up" feeling! The more you eat, the bigger the tummy gets—and the more you want to eat!

The majority of the stars drink milk because it is a beauty fad. But they drink it between meals to avoid taking too much liquid at mealtime. The streamlined Marlene Dietrich tells me that she never takes any liquid with the meal.

Serenity Prized

Of all the stars, Joan Crawford is the most exercise-minded. Her rigorous program permits her to keep ultrastreamlined at normal weight, 130 pounds.

Claudette Colbert, Madeleine Carroll and Myrna Loy put serenity above everything else in their beauty programs. Miss Loy has trained herself never to think of her work after studio hours and her hobby is gardening, which is particularly conducive to relaxation.

There's no mystery about the beauty programs of these stars. Their routines are sane and sensible—right eating, lots of healthful exercise, meticulous care of the skin, and regular wielding of the hairbrush. And they are proof that no woman need fear the old man with the sickle.

First of beautiful Madeleine Carroll's rules for loveliness is serenity

Hedge Sculpture in Again With Gardeners

WHEN you're snipping away at the family hedge, content yourself if you can just trim it in a reasonably straight line for you might blush to remember that barbering shrubs has been quite a fancy art in its day. By the way, the art is being revived. So don't be surprised if the little lady asks you to sculpture a few birds and maybe a cat along the sedate hedge you are trimming. For topiary is "in" again, and you'll be challenged by all sorts of fantasies made of shrubs and hedges.

Just in case you're too young to remember back to those good old days, the word "topiary" means trimming shrubs into ornramental shapes. This includes strange shapes indeed, spirals, pyramids, colonnades, peacocks, umbrellas, birds, and no telling what. The idea sounds pretty peculiar but topiary patterns in green can be charming when carefully done. In one sense one might say that they're more suitable for garden sculpture than stone pieces. And anyway, they are amusing and they supply interesting material for different conversation.

The experts say that privet or other deciduous material is not the thing for topiary as its growth hasn't the permanence or architectural quality worthy of the time and patience topiary work requires. The recommended evergreens are Japanese yew, hemlock, certain junipers, and many arborvitae. Blue retinospora and box are lovely in climates where these are hardy. The trick in "bush barbering" is first to select the proper shaped plant for the form you have in mind, from then on it's a matter of tying and clipping with infinite patience and tenderness. (Use a soft cord that won't injure growth.)

Keeper of the Mace Wields Symbol of U. S. Government

By George Thorpe.

Warren G. Hatcher is a policeman and a politician, a disciplinarian and a Congressional "Emily Post." He is the law behind the laws of 435 United States Representatives.

Slight, gray-haired Hatcher, of 230 First street southeast, is assistant sergeant at arms, or mace bearer, of the House. His duties range from halting fist fights on the floor to compelling members to remove their feet from the backs of chairs.

And his enforcement authority comes from a bundle of 13 ebony rods, surmounted by a 4½-inch silver globe and a foot-long American eagle—one of the most remarkable phenomena of the Government.

It may be because, aside from the flag, the mace is the only visible symbol of Federal Government authority. Whatever the explanation, the 4-foot bundle has a mystic power of restoring order in the House when every other means fail.

In 1847 pandemonium raged on the floor over a slavery debate but cries of "disunionist" and "damn Yankee" died away in complete calm when the sergeant at arms "presented" the mace. In the Sixtieth Congress a Georgia member whipped out a knife and rushed a New York Representative, only to stop in his tracks with the arrival of the mace.

During the famous war Congress, the Sixty-fifth, a House uproar, including several near-fights, subsided immediately when the silver-bound bundle appeared.

Not once in scores of similar incidents has the mace failed.

Most of the time, however, Hatcher does not have to resort to the magic weapon. Usually he leaves it standing in one of two places to the left of the Speaker's chair.

Not since 1933 has Hatcher been forced to break up a fist fight. On that occasion one Congressman had jerked another's glasses off and was winding up for a punch when Hatcher stepped between them.

Then, "Get off the floor," he ordered the aggressor, "or I'll get the mace." The Representative obeyed.

Through his 29 years in the House, as time keeper of debate and "coach" to the Speaker, minority leader's clerk, and in his present job, Hatcher has acted more as a protector of Congressmen than as a disciplinarian. Loyally, he guards them even when he orders Representatives to the back of the chamber to smoke or to put their feet on the floor.

ONLY Navy Yard employes, naval officers, reporters and cameramen saw the new fighting craft arrive. The public will not be permitted to go aboard during the four-day stay here, it was said by Lieut. Comdr. W. J. Murphy, jr., the commander. Persons permitted to enter the Navy Yard may view the craft from the dock, it was said.

ABOARD yesterday were five officers and 54 enlisted men. The destroyer Rodgers escorted the submarine here and tied up a short distance away.

CARRYING ten torpedo tubes and first of a slightly revised construction, the long-range submarine approached the docks cautiously, swung out to midriver and turned its nose to the dock, coming in easily.

LIEUT. Comdr. W. R. Terrell, aide to the Navy Yard commandant, greeted the submarine commander. The trip here from New York, begun at 8 a. m. Thursday, was uneventful and in good weather, the commander said.

FROM Washington the submarine will visit Moorhead City, N. C. The shake-down trip will take it as far south as Coco Solo, Canal Zone. Then it will return to Portsmouth, N. H., about the first of October.

First Wireless Transmission Between Ship and Shore Was Off Georgetown

The Post herewith presents an historic photograph—the first wireless transmission of the human voice between ship and shore.

The date was March 20, 1902. The scene was the Potomac River, opposite Georgetown University.

So obscure was the inventor whose dream was realized that day, and so scant was the publicity attending the experiment, that it is not generally known, even to technical historians, that the epochal broadcast occurred.

The inventor was a Murray (Ky.) farmer-wizard named Nathan Stubblefield, who died in poverty in a backwoods hovel in 1928 without ever having gained fame or money from his discovery. He had thought his invention so valuable that he would not sell it for the comparatively small sums offered him.

The picture of the ship-to-shore broadcast recently was discovered by a distant relative of the inventor, Vernon Stubblefield, a Murray druggist.

Nathan Stubblefield originally had experimented with improvements on the telephone, and in the course of his experiments had concluded, like Marconi, that sound could be transmitted without wires by way of the electricity that Stubblefield believed was in earth, air, and water (he did not know about ether).

After satisfying himself by radio telephone experiments on his farm that he had found the secret of such transmission, Stubblefield and his friends arranged the experiment on the Potomac.

WORLD ALMANAC'S RECORD

The Post of March 21, 1902, reported of the previous day's experiment:

"The steamer Bartholdi, of Washington, Capt. John Cumberland, was equipped with one set of telephone apparatus and a shore station established. Conversation was distinctly heard and Mr. Coggleshall, son of State Senator Coggleshall, of New York, played a harmonica, the familiar strains of which were so distinct as to startle the hearers at the receiver.

"A long wire was stretched bow to stern over the Bartholdi with the ends hanging in the water. Connected to this were the instruments and batteries, which closely resembled those of the ordinary telephone.

"On the Virginia shore, just above the Aqueduct Bridge and near the Three Sisters, 25 feet of wire was laid and the ends driven into the ground. To this wire another set of instruments was connected. The steamer then moved past the shore station, about one-third of a mile away. When opposite the shore station communication was easily had and conversation was distinctly heard by both parties. As the steamer dropped down or moved about the shore station the distinctness would gradually become less. Besides the water tests, a trial was also made on land and proved much more successful, the voices of the speakers being more plainly heard."

Stubblefield said:

"As to the practicability of my invention, all that I can claim for it now is that it is capable of sending simultaneous messages from a central distributing station over a very wide territory. For instance, anyone having a receiving instrument, which would consist merely of a telephone receiver and a few feet of wire, and a signaling gong could, upon being signaled by a transmitting station in Washington, or nearer, if advisable, be informed of weather news. My apparatus is capable of sending out a gong signal, as well as voice messages. Eventually it will be used for the general transmission of news of every description.

"I have as yet devised no method whereby it can be used with privacy. Wherever there is a receiving station the signal and the message may be heard simultaneously. Eventually I, or someone, will discover a method of tuning the transmitting and receiving instruments so that each will answer only its mate.

"The system can be developed until messages by voice can be sent and heard all over the country, to Europe, all over the world. There is nothing to stop it. The world is its limit."

Stubblefield was one of those unsung practical prophets who died with neither reward nor acclaim.

KENTUCKIAN'S SYSTEM TESTED

Instruments Used Were of Small Power, but Conversation Was Distinctly Heard at a Range of One-third of a Mile—The Inventor Expresses Satisfaction—Test Was Repeated on Land.

A test was made yesterday on the Potomac River, just above the Aqueduct Bridge at Georgetown, of the wireless telephone system invented by Nathan Stubblefield, of Murray, Ky. The trials lasted from 10:30 o'clock in the morning until after 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Stubbledeld, the inventor, declared that the tests were entirely satisfactory to him and said that had the wind not been blowing so hard the results obtained would have been even better. He used

D. C. Representation Indorsed by Flynn

New Democratic Chairman Abhors 'Discrimination'

Representation in Congress for the District had the support today of the chairmen of both major political parties.

Edward J. Flynn, who takes over the reins of the Democratic Party August 17, indorsed national representation for the District yesterday with the statement:

"The District of Columbia should not be discriminated against."

The tall, suave Bronx leader thus added his support for the Sumners resolution, providing for a constitutional amendment empowering Congress to grant whatever representation it might determine, to the indorsement by Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., of Massachusetts, chairman of the Republican Party.

Flynn's indorsement of the Sumners resolution buoyed the hopes of its backers that the House Rules Committee next Tuesday will give the measure privileged status and that it will soon get House approval.

Chairman Sumners of the Judiciary Committee, author of the proposed amendment for District representation in Congress, is scheduled to appear before the Rules Committee Tuesday with Representative Guyer, of Kansas, ranking Republican member of the Judiciary Committee, and Chairman Randolph, of the House District Committee, urging that the special rule be granted.

Majority Leader Rayburn, of Texas, and Chairman Sabath of the powerful Rules Committee, have already predicted that the special rule will be granted.

The fact that the Democratic Party platform includes a District suffrage plank was reason enough for him, Flynn said, to expect Democrats in Congress to support the measure.

Distinction Made

Flynn's statement said:

"I believe that Congress, which is now in unquestioned Democratic control, should by passing this legislation give evidence to all the people that the platform is sincerely a declaration of party principles and what the party aims to accomplish. I am glad to see that the party leaders in both Senate and House have taken this stand."

Flynn distinguished between representation in Congress for the District and elected local self-government.

The former had his unqualified indorsement, since it was part and parcel of the platform adopted at Chicago.

But on the latter, Flynn, in common with many leaders in Congress, was inclined to be cautious. He left the impression that he thought local self-government for the District might be ill-advised at this time.

Meanwhile partisans of the Sumners resolution awaited some word from President Roosevelt, whose attitude toward the question has not been made clear.

Many Indorsements

It was believed possible that the President might have something to say on the question when he holds a press conference here Tuesday.

Flynn's indorsement for the Sumners resolution was only one of many that the proposal has received from leaders of both parties in recent weeks.

Those who have approved the Sumners measure include:

Wendell L. Willkie, Republican candidate for President; Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Senator Barkley, majority leader; Senator McNary, Republican Vice Presidential candidate and minority leader; Senator Wagner, who was chairman of the Democratic platform committee; Representative Sabath, chairman of the House Rules Committee; Senator Ashurst, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and Senator Capper, former chairman of the District Committee.

Capital News in Brief

P. U. C. Postpones Transit Hearing

The Public Utilities Commission yesterday postponed a scheduled hearing on the controversial question of proper transportation facilities for Southeast residents until September 18. The date had been set for August 22.

The commission stated both the Capital Transit Co. and the Washington, Marlboro & Annapolis Motor Lines had requested the postponement.

The area east of the Anacostia River between Good Hope and Ridge roads southeast is served by these companies. Following complaints of the residents, the commission made an investigation of the service. They described the present transportation facilities as "inadequate."

Homing Pigeon Meets Death in Flight

An identification number—AU39H736—yesterday uncovered part of the story behind the death of a homing pigeon, which fell from a tree to the feet of a watchman at Harvard Village, Eighteenth and Harvard streets northwest.

The pigeon belonged to C. S. Eusebio, 637 E street southeast, a member of the Capital City Racing Pigeon Club. It had been released at Akron, Ohio, 300 miles away, six weeks ago, and should have completed the flight in less than a day. The racer had already successfully completed 100 and 200 mile flights, and this was its first longer trial. It had probably been trapped, and later escaping, starved to death only a few miles fro mhome, Eusebio surmised.

Bedbug Causes Sleep —But It's Wrong Kind

Discovery of a bedbug which insures sound sleep—but the wrong kind—was reported yesterday by the Public Health Service.

The bug, which is the "grandfather" of all bedbugs because it is several times larger than the ordinary insects, carries the germ of sleeping sickness, said Dr. Arzroony Packchanian, of the National Institute of Health.

Baby Escapes Injury As Auto Hits Carriage

Barbara Gray was catapulted out of her carriage by the impact of an auto yesterday—but she'll have to wait several years to appreciate the narrowness of her escape. She's only 7 months old now.

Near the intersection of Fifth and G streets southeast, an auto ran upon the sidewalk, into a telegraph pole and against the baby carriage in which Barbara was being wheeled by Ellen Tillman, 11.

When Barbara's mother, Mrs Constance Marie Gray, colored, of 301 G street southeast, reached the scene, she found the carriage top "torn off," she said, but the baby intact. She took the baby to Providence Hospital, where her fears were relieved. Bruises on its fingers were the extent of the injury, she said.

D.C. Man, 61, Saves Wallet In Fight

Aged Pedestrian Hurt by Footpads; Clerk Trades Blows With a Bandit

Although the bandit's pistol was pointed at him, William C. Frame, 23, clerk in a liquor store at 1527 Eleventh street northwest, managed to land a right to jaw of a bandit who was leaving the store with $60 taken from the till.

Hurled against the wall by the blow, the gunman bounded back and with his free first knocked Frame to the floor and fled.

The robbery occurred as a customer stepped into the store. The customer was threatened, but not robbed.

Man, 61, Fights Footpads

More fortunate in the matter of preventing the robbery, but less so in respect to personal injury was 61-year-old Rutherford Cumming, of 2148 Florida avenue northwest, who was accosted by two footpads at Decatur place and Florida avenue.

As Cumming tusseled with the assailants one drew a weapon and struck the elderly pedestrian on the head. Cumming, however, refused to part with his wallet, and his cries, together with the arrival of passersby, frightened the thugs away. He was taken to Emergency Hospital and treated for head wounds.

Cafe Robbed of $25

Elizabeth Boville, 22, of 1011 B street northeast, employed in a cafe at 22 F street northeast, reported to police that a man holding one hand in a jacket pocket as if he had a weapon entered the store, threatened to shoot her if she resisted, and escaped with $25.

Lieut. Arthur A. Fletcher, jr., of Brentwood, Md., has been assigned to the Eleventh Bombardment Squadron at the West Coast's largest military air base and will be an officer pilot in the flying fortress war planes, according to an announcement from the commanding officer at Hamilton Field, Calif.

Lieut. Fletcher, who is the son of Mrs. C. J. Driscoll, 3426 Evans street, Brentwood, has just reported to his first duty station after completing the Army Air Corps flying training. He was graduated with the silver wings of a military aviator and a commission as second lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, June 22, after having received an appointment to Randolph Field, the Army's "West Point of the Air," in October, 1939.

Lieut. Fletcher, a native of Washington, attended Western High School and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Architect Waiting for Chance To Mend Roofs of Congress

Anyone knowing when the Seventy-sixth Congress will adjourn or recess will please communicate with David Lynn, architect of the Capitol.

Lynn, who has charge of the building, its maintenance and improvement, faces a worrisome dilemma.

The roofs over the Senate and House chambers must be strengthened—and soon—but the work cannot be started until Congress goes home, at least temporarily. And no one knows when that will be.

His office revealed yesterday that Lynn plans to confer on Monday with Congressional leaders in an attempt to find out what's what. If, for example, he can get assurance Congress will disband by September 15 and stay away at least two months, he can tell them those two months would be sufficient time to reinforce the two chamber roofs, which are now held unsafe.

Once the roofs were trussed, construction of their replacements could be started at any time. While there is no hurry to build the new roofs, Lynn believes it is essential to strengthen the old ones as soon as possible, for safety's sake.

If the Capitol architect can get no indication on Monday as to the approximate date of Congress' adjournment, it may be necessary to move the Senate and House to other quarters so that the roof work can proceed. Temporary chambers now under consideration include the caucus rooms in the Senate and House Office buildings and the Supreme Court chamber.

ICC Auditor Carries Away 15 Ribbons, Sweepstakes Honors at Gladiolus Show

L. L. Powers, a head accountant and auditor with the Interstate Commerce Commission, collected some colorful personal statistics last night. He came out with 11 blue ribbons, one red and three white ribbons as sweepstakes winner at the Woodridge Garden Club's gladiolus show.

Powers, who lives at 214 Colesville road, Hyattsville, amid a garden of glodioluses, exhibited the spike which won the title "best in the show." It was a Picardy, salmon pink, with 15 florets. He brought approximately 50 of the 90 flowers which were exhibited by 24 persons at the show in Sherwood Presbyterian Sunday school building, Twenty-second street and Rhode Island avenue northeast.

H. J. Clay, president of the Rhode Island Avenue Citizens Association, won ribbons in a field which a man rarely enters—miniature arrangement. A green luster vase, finger high, which he had bought in New Orleans, was filled with a spray of coral bells, a sprig of hemlock and dusty miller—the entire display only 3 inches tall. With it he won blue ribbons in two miniature classes.

Mrs. C. E. Ross, of 113 Westmoreland road, Falls Church, won the sweepstakes award for flower arrangements and a total of seven blue ribbons, along with six red and one white. Her husband, who divides the digging chores with her, shared in the pride last night.

Officials of the show, a fourteenth annual event, said it was smaller than usual because of the recent severe heat, but the array of rainbow colorings made a brave display nevertheless.

Class 1, collection of 15 named varieties in separate containers, first, L. L. Powers; second, L. P. Ditman; class 2, collection of 10 named varieties in separate containers, first, Mrs. C. E. Slayer of Mother Held 'Unsound;' Jury Probes Case

Evidence against Jerome Howard, 26, accused of murdering his 66-year-old mother last March, was presented to the grand jury yesterday as the Commission on Mental Health filed a certificate in District Court finding him of "unsound mind."

The commission said Howard should not be permitted at large, but withheld recommendations for his future custody, pending action of the grand jury. A parade of witnesses testified throughout the day.

Mrs. Bessie Catherine Howard, the prisoner's mother, was found dead in a second floor bedroom of their home at 815 Taylor street northwest March 30. She had been stabbed to death.

Railroad Board Employe, 70, First to Retire

Charles Baker Will Leave Retirement Agency Next Week

Charles Baker, 70, next week will become the first retired employe of the Railroad Retirement Board.

Baker, a veteran Government employe, has worked for the board three years. The board has been operating five years, and paying annuities to thousands of retired railroad workers, but until Baker celebrated his seventieth birthday, August 2, none of its own employes had become eligible to retire in his own right.

BAKER

An employe in the claims division, Baker will go to work for the last time Wednesday. After that, he said, he will rest a while and decide what he is going to do.

Baker literally sailed into Government service. He went down to the Panama Canal with the second boatload of civilian employes in 1905. He began work as a stenographer, and in a few months he became secretary to Charles Magoon, first civilian Governor of the Canal Zone. He later served with Magoon in Cuba, before returning to Washington in 1909.

Buddy, Can You Spare About $50 For Car Fare?

H. W. Rohl, California construction engineer, flew into Washington Tuesday to confer with officials here about the $8,000,000 dam he is building in Colorado. Since he likes a lot of room and scheduled stops irk him, he chartered a 21-passenger airliner and flew here from Pueblo, Colo.

Seems, though, that the conference was taking longer than Rohl expected. Late Thursday night, he suddenly decided to visit New York. He ordered a 21-seater flown in from New York, and then he was off. Yesterday morning he was back, on another ship for 21, feeling much better about it all.

The better feeling, incidentally, cost about $800. The chartered flight from Pueblo here ran into $2,100.

Fitzgerald Reasserts Draft Stand

Legion Official Urges Support For Defense Before Convention

James B. Fitzgerald, national vice commander of the American Legion, last night reasserted the organization's stand for universal conscription at the opening of the fifteenth annual convention of the District Department of the Legion Auxiliary.

Speaking to more than 300 members in the Department of Commerce auditorium, Fitzgerald declared the Legion "has maintained a firm stand for military obligation for 21 years."

The Legion official urged the auxiliary members to support defense measures and struck at those unwilling to pay special defense taxes.

"Anyone who avoids the payment of their share of taxation is in my judgment just as morally guilty of sabotage as an enemy who would sabotage a munitions plant, factories or battleships," he asserted.

Mrs. Helen L. Gilbert, Eastern national vice president of the auxiliary, also stressed necessity for wholehearted support of defense measures.

"With the United States the last remaining democracy in the world," Mrs. Gilbert declared, "it is very important that the women of the Nation realize the necessity for supporting any measures needed to build up our defenses."

The meeting opened with a call to order by Miss Minnie May Harday, national executive committeewoman, who then turned the gavel over to Mrs. Mary B. McMillin, departmental president.

White-gowned delegates marched between rows of legionnaires of the National Guard of Honor to carry American flags and unit colors to the rostrum. Then Mrs. McMillin delivered a brief address of welcome. The United States Navy Band Orchestra played selections throughout the ceremonies.

Mrs. Catherine Mills, chairman of the awards committee, presented trophies to the following units and their members:

Ferrell Gets Winning Hit; Run Forced

Walker's Slugging Is Factor; Bagby and Heving Are Victims; Krakauskas Stars

By Shirley Povich.
Post Staff Writer

The Nats fetched a ball game out of the first yesterday with two ninth-inning runs that beat the Red Sox, 6 to 5, to the shrill delight of 8,000 Ladies Day guests at Griffith Stadium.

Red Sox pitching and Red Sox strategy went sour in that ninth inning. It was a dreary denouement for the Boston club with Relief Pitcher John Heving walking the tying run across the plate and setting the stage for Rick Ferrell's climactic single to left field which won the ball game.

Gerald Walker, who was pestering the Boston pitching all afternoon, set the Nats' ninth-inning uprising in motion with his fourth hit of the game—a single to left off Jim Bagby. Bagby put the winning run on base by walking Cecil Travis before getting anybody out.

Nats' Strategy Works

Then the game became knee-deep in strategy. Bucky Harris lifted Jimmy Bloodworth, whose first-inning triple had brought the Nats two runs, in favor of Sammy West. It was for bunting purposes. West laid down a perfect sacrifice and the tying and winning runs moved to third and second.

In this crisis Joe Cronin removed Bagby and inserted his relief ace, Heving, to pitch to Buddy Myer. Heving was ordered to walk Myer purposely to fill the bases, thus bringing up Jimmy Pofahl, who was hitless all day. The strategy appeared excellent when Pofahl missed Heving's first two side-arm curves by wide margins. But Heving's success ended there. He threw four wide balls and forced Walker home with the tying run.

Rick Ferrell put an end to it all. He had two strikes against him when he hoisted a long fly into left-field. Roger Cramer backed up as if to make the catch, then realizing that the run would score from third under any circumstances, he permitted the ball to drop safely, generously giving Ferrell a hit on the play.

Leonard Is Blasted

The Red Sox had blasted Dutch Leonard out of the game in four innings, but they were checked abruptly by the relief pitching of Joe Krakauskas, who kept the Nats in the ball game with his shutout contribution for four innings after relieving Leonard. From the fifth through the eighth, Krakky yielded only two hits, one of which was an infield single.

Leonard's knuckle ball boomeranged in the first inning and figured directly in two Boston runs. After DiMaggio and Cramer opened the game with singles, DiMaggio scored when one of Leonard's knucklers bounded off Ferrell's mitt toward the backstop. Cramer moved to third on the passed ball, and scored on Foxx's infield out.

In the same inning the Nats tied the score at 2-to-2 despite only one

Dodger Gains Twelfth Victory in 1-0 Game; Bees' Streak Broken

By the Associated Press

Boston, Aug. 9.—Whitlow Wyatt, rapidly rounding into one of the National League's brightest pitching stars, shut out the Boston Bees, 1 to 0, today for the Brooklyn Dodgers, besides getting a single and scoring the winning run himself.

Each of the teams had won four consecutive games before they collided today and the battle they put up to continue their strings was a stirring one.

Wyatt was superb, allowing only four hits and striking out seven batters, including Slugger Chester Ross three times in a row. He never let a runner get past second until the ninth inning. It was the 30-year-old right-hander's second straight shutout and twelfth victory of the season against nine defeats.

Dick Errickson, the promising rookie who opposed Wyatt, also pitched a fine game, allowing only eight hits and keeping the Dodgers blanked until the eighth, when Wyatt, Dixie Walker and Babe Phelps bunched singles in a small but effective rally.

This was the only inning that Brooklyn got a man as far as third base, although the Dodgers put three men on the sacks in the fourth. Dolph Camilli died stealing and Pete Reiser was trapped off first.

Peewee Reese was held hitless, but waited out a walk to make 21 consecutive games in which he has managed to get on base.

Printer Nine Off Tonight for National Tourney

Washington's powerful representative in the Thirtieth Annual Union Printers' International Baseball Tournament, to start tomorrow in Cincinnati and continue through August 17, will leave Union Station tonight at 6:30, it was announced last night.

A full squad will make the trip, including trainers and manager. One of the leading nines in the local U. S. Government League, the D. C. Printers will be one of the favorites in the huge event.

Twelve cities—Washington, New York, Boston, Baltimore, Chicago, St. Louis, Detroit, Pittsburgh, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis and Cincinnati—will send teams.

Ocean City, Md., Aug. 9 (AP).—Marlin struck here today after a lull of more than a week, and eight were boated and one tagged. The catch brought the season total to 96 since the first was taken July 20.

In addition to the marlin, a 153-pound allisons tuna was also boated today by Ernest Aughley, Harrington, Del. It was the third tuna, all over a hundred pounds in weight, caught here within the last two weeks. One of the allisons tipped the scales at 192½ pounds, breaking the United States coastal record.

$62,000 American Derby at Washington Park To Draw Six 3-Year-Olds; Fisher Colt May Be Favorite; Mioland Also Entered

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 9.—The $62,900 American Derby, to be decided at Washington Park tomorrow, shapes up as the biggest puzzle of the 1940 turf season.

Six 3-year-olds were named today to go to the post, but three of these—Col. E. R. Bradley's Bimelech, Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' Gallahadion and Charles C. Fisher's Sirocco—have beaten one another in major races this season. This situation promises to turn tomorrow's race over the mile and a quarter route into a scramble.

Two of the three other starters are from the Pacific Coast. They are Charles S. Howard's Mioland, fourth in the Kentucky Derby and second in the Preakness, and William B. Simpson's Weigh Anchor. The third is Super Chief, owned by the Denemark Stable of Chicago. Super Chief's only outstanding triumph this season was his victory in the Arkansas Derby.

Past performances indicate the kind of perplexing puzzle this race may be. Gallahadion defeated Bimelech, Sirocco and Mioland in the Kentucky Derby. Bimelech conquered Gallahadion and Mioland in the Preakness and also ran away from Gallahadion in the Belmont Stakes. Then along came Sirocco to beat Gallahadion by seven lengths and Bimelech by ten in the Arlington Classic.

Off his Arlington Classic victory, Sirocco has been installed a 9-5 favorite, with Bimelech second choice and Gallahadion third.

Two factors may favor Bimelech tomorrow. There is no early speed horse in the race and Bimelech may go out in front at the start and forget to stop. Secondly, Freddie Smith, who has ridden the Bradley bullet in every race, will not be aboard. Basil James will have the mount.

West-Coasters Capture Boys' Doubles Title

By the Associated Press

Culver, Ind., Aug. 9.—The top-seeded combination of Jim Brink, of Seattle, Wash., and Bob Flakenburg, of Hollywood, Calif., late today annexed the 1940 doubles title in the boys' division of the National Boys' and Junior Tennis Tournament.

The West Coast duo won the crown by defeating the second-seeded team of Allen Richardson, of Webster Grove, Mo., and Jack Tuero, of New Orleans, in straight sets. The score was 6—0, 6—3.

Tomorrow the junior and boys' singles ttles and the junior doubles championship will be determined as six survivors of 160 players who entered the week-long tournament take to the courts.

Earl Bartlett, of New Orleans, and Bobby Carrothers, of Coronado, Calif., meet for the junior singles honors; Douglas Woodbury, of Los Angeles, teams with Carrothers to play Bartlett and Earl Cochell, of Los Angeles, for the junior doubles diadem, and Brink and Falkenburg compete against each other for the boys' single crown.

Mickey Parks Not Definitely Lost to 'Skins

Veteran Center May See Action; Zimmerman Shines in Practice

By Al Hailey
A Staff Correspondent

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 9.—Heartened by reports that Mickey Parks, veteran center, may be able to see action despite recurrence of an old knee injury, Coach Ray Flaherty discovered a new ray of sunshine today in his Redskin squad—Roy Zimmerman, rookie halfback, obtained from San Jose State.

Flaherty sent his squad through the first bit of punting drills this morning and the 6 foot 3 inch rookie was sending them down the field 70 and 80 yards a crack—and in the air at that.

It was a relief to Flaherty for yesterday Zimmerman was bungling almost every assignment in the signal drills and was constantly running into his backfield mates on reverse plays; meanwhile Flaherty was informed by his physician brother, Dr. Dick Flaherty, that Parks' knee has a piece of broken cartilage which may or may not bench the former Oklahoma star, a veteran of two years with the Skins. The injury may flare up again in two weeks ore it may not recur for the entire season. The Redskin coach was informed at the end of the season, however, an operation will be performed on the knee, injured last year in the Detroit game.

Rookie Bob Fisher, tackle, obtained from the Los Angeles Bulldogs pro gridders, was still wrapped in ice packs today as Dr. Flaherty debated whether an appendicitis operation would be necessary. If Fisher is lost for the season, it will be a serious blow to the Redskin line.

Riggs Announces He Will Take Vacation From Tourney Play Fearing 'Staleness'

By the Associated Press

Rye, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Don McNeill, who may be the next singles champion, battered Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, the Atlanta atom, into submission today, 2—6, 6—4, 6—1, 6—3, to win his way into the Eastern grass court finals.

It was a stirring display—for almost two sets, or as long as Grant had steam up to retrieve the endless flow of near-perfect shots that McNeill kept driving back at him.

But when Bitsy tired out—early in the second set—the flawless Oklahoman raked the baseline with shot after shot and there wasn't anything Grant could do but lead the applause.

McNeil Charges

McNeill, once he had Grant retreating, was merciless, particularly in the third set, which he won with a series of perfect placements. Then after a ten-minute rest, Grant was able to play on even terms—but not for long, for McNeill was on the victory trail and wouldn't be sidetracked.

The women's play moved as expected when Alice Marble, who has forgotten how it feels to lose, disposed of pretty Gracyn Wheeler, of Santa Monica, Calif, 6—2, 6—0, and Helen Jacobs earned the right to meet Alice in tomorrow's finals by taking Sarah Palfrey over the hurdles 6—3, 6—4, in a bitterly contested battle.

Thus the staid old tourney will see the first repetition of last year's final at Forest Hills, where Miss Marble and Miss Jacobs staged a grueling thriller, with Alice winning by 6—0, 8—10, 6—4.

Riggs Meets Prusoff

Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, and enry Prusoff, of Seattle, meet in the other men's semifinal tomorrow.

Riggs, America's No. 1 tennis player, announced that he is not going to play any more tournament tennis this month because he fears he "might become stale" by the time the national championships start at Forest Hills on August 30.

Riggs, who is seeking his fourth Eastern title in succession, will pass up the Newport Casino Tournament next week at Newport, R. I., and the national doubles championships at Brookline, Mass., the week after.

"I've been playing too much tennis," Riggs said, "and I'm afraid my game might go stale. I'm going to rest for a week and then spend the remainder of the time before the nationals practicing."

Riggs said he will receive some coaching from Eleanor Tennant, famous teacher. He spent several hours off in a corner today, listening to her advice on how he can improve his game.

Ruffing Hurt As Yankees Beat A's, 2-0

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 9.—Red Ruffing and Steve Sundra collaborated in a two-hit pitching spectacle today to give the world champion New York Yankees a 2-to-0 triumph over the Philadelphia Athletics.

Ruffing started, but pulled a muscle in his left leg and had to retire from the game with one out in the third inning. He had given up one hit, a single in the first inning.

When Ruffing gave up, Manager Joe McCarthy called on Steve Sundra, who won 11 and lost 1 last year but hadn't been able to achieve a single victory this season. Sundra proceeded to surprise everybody by shutting out the A's for the remainder of the game on one other hit, a single by Dick Siebert at the start of the fourth, and got credit for the victory.

Both New York runs were scored off Johnny Babich, who started for the A's and lasted until removed for a pinch-hitter in the seventh.

The Yanks couldn't do anything with him in the first four frames, but Babe Dahlgren singled to open the fifth, stole second, went to third on a fly and scored on Joe Gordon's single to center. Then in the sixth Red Rolfe singled, Tom Henrich walked and Joe DiMaggio singled Rolfe home.

The A's threatened off and on throughout the game, getting men on base in seven of the nine innings, but never were able to get past second.

Wisconsin Consents To Crew Coach Release

Madison, Wis., Aug. 9 (AP).—The University of Wisconsin athletic board today affirmed its decision of April 30 releasing Ralph Hunn, university crew coach. The board held hearings last night and today after Hunn requested a review of his dismissal.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Mr. Mike Jacobs may be wasting (1) his time and (2) his efforts in his newest project—the purchase of the Brooklyn Dodgers franchise in the National League. The New York fight promoter needs more than the $2,000,000 necessary to swing the deal. He needs also the approval of a white-maned, hawk-faced old gentleman with an office in Chicago who is commonly known as Judge Landis.

POVICH

People don't just buy big-league ball clubs. They buy them only if it pleases Landis. And Landis is finicky about who shall and who shall not enter the high councils of Baseball, Inc., as a club owner. One word from the judge and a club owner in a selling mood must call the deal off; or at least deal with other parties upon whom the judge would look more favorably.

There is grave doubt that it would please the judge to have Promoter Jacobs as the head of a syndicate that would be in control of the Brooklyn franchise. Jacobs, long allied with the prize fight mob, would have two strikes on him in any negotiations to which Landis might be a party. Landis' chief hates are (1) horse racing and (2) the prize fight industry.

There isn't any question of Landis' authority to nip any deal for a club that he didn't savor. Under the broad authority by which he can take any steps to curb persons or things which he considers "detrimental to the best interests" of baseball, the judge waves a scepter over the game that is absolute. He alone judges what may or may not be to the "best interests" of the game.

It would not be drawing the picture too finely to point out that Landis could step into the Brooklyn-Jacobs deal and command: "Call it off. This club can't be sold to Jacobs. I don't like the way he parts his hair." He wouldn't be compelled to make any further explanation; not under the broad powers the club owners delegated to him in his iron-clad contract.

Landis has never pussy-footed on his determination to keep the ownership of big league baseball on a high social plane. He wants no part of such ownership as, for example, marks the National Professional Football League, which boasts one club owner who was under indictment for race horse collections, and another who was a bookmaker on the New York tracks.

That prize fighting and baseball don't mix has long been an ideal of Landis.' A few years ago he cracked down on Art Shires who attempted to capitalize on his baseball fame by boxing professionally in the off-season. He cracked down by telling Shires to get out of the fight business, or get out of baseball.

Landis is zealous about his job of keeping baseball clean. He was hired as commissioner in 1920 because the club owners wanted to bring respectability to baseball, even if they had to buy it in the form of a $50,000 contract for the judge. Keeping the game above suspicion has always been his first duty, as he saw it.

Twenty years ago, the owners did succeed in buying respectability. They got the judge, and his long record for integrity on the Federal bench, to front for their industry, which was severely rocked by the White Sox scandals that broke that season. The loss of public confidence following the Black Sox confessions threatened the club owners' game, and their investments of millions in players and real estate.

Landis has been hepped on the subject of keeping the game above suspicion ever since. He has battled the club owners in his own house, and threatened to resign unless they gave him carte blanche, to clean up the game as he saw fit. In fear that he would quit 'em, they yielded his every point, gave him longer contracts with better salary figures. It wasn't the money he was after, however, merely the authority to administer the game on the high levels he demanded. He once cut his own salary $20,000.

He was acting with the authority they had been compelled to give him when, last winter, he declared 96 Detroit players to be free agents. He said he had investigated fully and that the Detroit club had not conformed to his rules prohibiting the "covering up" of players on their minor league farms. He was not compelled to make any other explanation. His decision cost the Tiger ownership an estimated $500,000 in player investments.

That's the kind of a fellow Mr. Jacobs must deal with before he can make any deal with the Brooklyn ownership to buy the club. Nobody will be flaggergasted if Landis says, simply, that he doesn't like prize fight people and that Fight Promoter Jacobs can't buy into big-league baseball.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Aug. 9.—At the coroner's inquest next month, when the question of who killed the Yanks comes up, we suspect that the chief perpetrator will go unnamed. Which is the reason why we'd like to single him out today for commendation or condemnation, depending on which you think he deserves for ending the reign of the champs and giving the baseball public a new shuffle.

CONSIDINE

He is Clark Griffith, the elderly soul who runs the Washington Senators. His name probably will be lost in the obituaries about the defeated champs, at least it won't be given the prominence that the 1940 pitching of Feller, or Newsom or the decline of this or that Yank will get.

Griff did it. It must give the old boy a thrill of satisfaction to see what a perfect job he turned in, even if he does have to stand on his head to see his Senators in the slot where he hoped they would be at this time of the season. Though we imagine some of that frustration is in turn frustrated by the work of that terrific young rookie pitcher, Sid Hudson, the old man won in a Florida turkey raffle.

Griff did it by swinging through the rule which prohibits an American League pennant winner from making a deal within the league for a year after capturing first prize. The rule named no names, of course, but it was directly aimed at the Yanks. It passed, 7-0. Ed Barrow, president of the Yanks, did not vote, though he squawked mightily at the machinations of the Washington owner. The jubilant American League owners then tried to get the National League to put through the same rule, but they declined without thanks.

When he originally presented the idea, Griff misphrased it in such a way as would have forced an unheard of dry-rot on the Yanks. He would have made it illegal for them to seek replacements for worn-out players even among their own farm clubs. The motion was reworded and amended in such a way as to bar only their seeking of replacements from among American League players.

It was enough. The only experienced aid the campaign-weary Yanks were able to get this year was lefty Grissom—which gives you some idea of the invulnerability of the embargo Griff placed around them. The one slim chance of getting aid in their hour of distress was the negligible hope that some better-than-ordinary National Leaguer would be waived out of his league, and then rejected by the seven lesser clubs of the American League. Then the Yanks could hire him, as Grissom was hired. You can imagine just how much talented beef-on-hoof could run such a gamut successfully.

It isn't unreasonable to presume that the Yanks would have won the 1940 pennant if, when they saw the handwriting on the wall, they were able to make deals for experienced replacements. They had a lot to deal with, not only fancy Yankee benchwarmers and run-down veterans with glamorous names but also an enormous supply of slightly unripe minor league talent. It wouldn't have been too hard to bring to the Yankee roster the mature, ready-to-work big leaguers who were fit to stop the debacle.

Griff's plan is a most expert piece of sabotaging, but whether the rule will survive another year won't be known until the next winter meeting.

Probably the greatest supporter of it this time will be Barrow, seeking retribution at the expense of the next pennant winner. Without much doubt it fulfills Griff's wildest dream of keeping the rich clubs from dominating the pennants by means of sheer dough.

Let this then be the epitaph on the tomb of the greatest dynasty in baseball history:

Lynch-Johnsen Doubles Team Upset in District Open Tennis

Victors Face Welsh And Mitchell in Final Today; Davey Leaves For Casino Invitation

Putting their best brand of tennis into a third decisive set, the No. 3 seeded doubles team of Alphonso Smith and Dick Murphy blasted top-seeded Hugh Lynch and Davey Johnsen from the District of Columbia Men's Open Tennis tournament yesterday, 6—4, 3—6 and 6—3, at Edgemoor Club.

It was one of the most stunning upsets of a surprise-ridden tournament. On the strength of their triumph, Smith and Murphy romped into today's doubles final, where they will meet Barney Welsh and Dooley Mitchell, defending champions, at 3 p. m.

For Johnsen, youthful sensation of recent local competition, yesterday's loss was the second upset in two days. On Thursday he bowed out of the singles when Lynch, playing heady but by no means brilliant tennis, beat him in a nip-and-tuck battle.

Immediately after his loss, the George Washington student left for Newport, R. I., where he will compete in the Casino Invitation.

Though Welsh and Mitchell hold the D. C. doubles title at present, they go into today's clash on the short end of the odds. They are seeded fourth under No. 3 seeded Smith and Murphy. An on the strength of recent performances, the latter duo also holds an edge. The Middle Atlantic crown went to baldpated Smith and handsome Murphy when they beat the same pair they will face today in the final.

Following the doubles final, only one match remains in the annual meet—Welsh's battle with Lynch for the singles title. It will be staged Sunday at 3 p. m. on Edgemoor's center court.

Brewers Hand Cameo Setback in League, 5-3

Heurich Victor in Seven-Inning Game Of Post League; Furnituremen Voice Protest Of Contest Being Called on 'Darkness'

As a result of a 5-3 beating handed it by the Heurich Brewers yesterday, Cameo Furniture nine saw its chances of ending the second half of Washington Post Industrial League play go sailing off into thin air.

Cameo's hopes, therefore, hinge on the final game of the regular schedule Tuesday, between Heurich and O'Donnell's Sea Grill. A Heurich victory will throw the second half into a playoff between the winner and Cameo, while a Grill victory gives the Furniture club a clean title. In any case, Cameo must engage the Brewmen, first-half winners, in a series before taking the league championship and a berth in the city-wide title tournament.

Not without a violent protest did Heurich collect its bats and march off the Ellipse victorious yesterday. The "squawk" arose from spectators, Cameo Manager Connie Wyche and Cameo players, when Umpire Mattingly decided to call off hostilities after the seventh inning. Darkness was given as the reason.

Yet, according to fans, almost an hour of daylight remained and what was developing into a good game was ruined. Wyche and his players, of course, saw prospects of staging a rally evaporate with the decision.

To big Ed Colliflower went credit for the victory. He hurled seven-hit ball, allowed only one man to reach first in the first two innings and was touched for only two bases on balls.

It was Colliflower who launched Heurich scoring in the second when he drove Hershberger home from second with a clean single. He later scored on Kaufman's triple. Cameo wasn't able to tie the count until the fourth, when "Giggles" Adair slugged a terrific home run to centerfield, to send Harris home in front of him.

Thompson Beats Cards, 7-2, for Reds

Junior Takes 11th Of Season as Mates Regain Batting Form

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Aug. 9.—The Cincinnati Reds threw their baseball machine back into high gear tonight to blast out a 7 to 2 triumph over the St. Louis Cardinals and give Junior Thompson his eleventh victory of the season.

After watching their league lead dwindle to 4½ games, Red batters, who haven't been hitting their weight in the last two weeks, slugged two Cardinal hurlers for 10 hits.

Fiddler Bill McGee, holding two decisions over the Reds this season, gave up eight hits before he was removed in the sixth inning and the Rhinelanders counted two more safeties on Ike Hutchinson, his successor.

The Reds marked up three runs in the first inning. Bill Werber reached first on Joe Orengo's error. Mike McCormick sacrificed and Lonnie Frey singled to right, scoring Werber. Frank McCormick doubled off the centerfield scoreboard to score Frey.

The Reds tallied again in the fourth and racked up two more in the sixth on Morrie Arnovich's double and Thompson's single. They topped off their scoring with another run in the seventh on a double by Frank McCormick and a single.

Thompson, making his first start since he was spiked in a fight July 23 in a game at Brooklyn, held the Cards scoreless until the fifth inning, when McGee sparked his teammates into their only tallies with a single. Jimmy Brown doubled and crossed the plate behind McGee on Terry Moore's single to center, but Thompson stopped them there, allowing seven hits.

Indians Lose To Browns, 4-3, In Night Game

Swift's Ninth-Inning Single Scores Winning Run; Judnich Homers

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Aug. 9.—A ninth inning single oy Bob Swift, scoring Harlond Clift, from third, gave the St. Louis Browns a 4 to 3 victory over the Cleveland Indians tonight, enabling the Detroit Tigers, who lost to Chicago, to retain first place by a half game.

Limited to two hits by Mel Harder for six and a half innings, the Browns pecked away for one run in the seventh, then tied the count at 3-all in the next frame on Walt Judnich's twenty-first homer with Roy Cullenbine on board.

Clift opened the last half of the ninth with a resounding double which brought Harvey Elsenstat to Harder's rescue. Don Heffner bunted to Ken Keltner, who slipped on the wet grass, Clift advancing to third and Heffner being safe at first, setting the stage for Swift's game-winning blow.

The Indians took the lead in the fifth on Keltner's single, his steal of second and Beau Bell's single. They added two more runs in the seventh on Keltner's double, an error by Johnny Berardino, a triple by Rollie Hemsley and a single by Harder.

Bengals Tie Game Up in Seventh but Fail to Stand Ground as Chicago Spurts to Victory in Final Frame

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 9.—The pesky Chicago White Sox defeated the high-flying Detroit Tigers tonight, 3 to 2, when Mike Kreevich doubled home the winning run in the ninth, before 36,713 spectators.

Going into the last half of the ninth with the score tied at 2-all, Southpaw Ed Smith, who had pitched superb ball all the way, opened with a single off Frank Metha's glove. Skeeter Webb put him on second with a sacrifice and then Kreevich doubled down the third base line for the deciding run.

All other runs of the game were unearned.

Smith gave up only five hits and struck out 11 batters for his ninth victory of the season. The Tigers' two runs came in the seventh. Frank Higgins opened with a single and Birdie Tebbetts survived when Bob Kennedy muffed an easy double play ball.

Metha advanced both runners. Tuck Stainback, batting for starting pitcher, Dizzy Trout, reached first on a fielders' choice, Higgins scoring when Kennedy's throw failed to catch him at the plate. Dick Bartell scored Tebbetts with a double to center.

The Sox got their first run in the fifth when Kreevich lived on Bartells' error and scored on Joe Kuhel's double to right field. In the sixth, the Sox added their second marker on Taft Wright's single, Trouts' error on Larry Rosenthal's bunt and Thresh's single to center.

Pirates Gain First Division, Beating Cubs

Bucs Hang Up Eighth Victory, 6-2; Sewell Hurls 3-Hit Game

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Aug. 9.—The Pittsburgh Pirates tonight ran their string of victories to eight straight, beating Chicago, 6 to 2, and climbing over the Cubs into the first division behind the four-hit hurling of Truett (Rip) Sewell. It was Rip's tenth triumph against two defeats.

Vince DiMaggio started the Buccos off to victory and the 29,978 fans to cheering in the second frame, hitting his eleventh homer of the season off Ken Raffensberger behind Elbie Fletcher's double.

By the time Bill Nicholson connected with his nineteenth four-base smash in the seventh, after Jimmy Gleeson had tripled, the Pirates already had added two more runs and for good measure they scored another pair in the eighth.

Sewell was in rare form, facing but 30 men. Only one Cub was left on base, the result of an error by Rip in the second inning. Double plays erased two the Cubs who singled.

DiMaggio had a perfect day at bat, getting two singles in addition to his homer and being struck by a pitched ball.

Senor Al Lopez, who has paced the Pirates in their sensational spurt of the past month, contributed two singles in addition to his usual fine work behind the plate.

Cameo Runner Bites Off Too Much—He's

War Port, Steeplechase Choice, Loses Course and Race

Four Jumps Overlooked By Jockey

Inexperienced Rider Takes 14 Fences, Crosses Line, Then Makes Jumps Missed

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Cumberland, Md., Aug. 9.—After a 'chase race which should, but probably won't, end all steeplechase races, the favorite player has adopted the popular air. "I'll Never Smile Again" as the theme song of the sport of kings here in the Queen City.

Practically every nickle of "wise money" here today was placed on the chances of R. C. Waple's War Port in the jumping event. The 7-year-old had shown enough to win two races of this kind. His love for the track was public property. He was the one horse that just couldn't lose at odds of 9 to 10.

And so, after a lot of hustling and scuffling around the course amid flying brush, War Port ducked into the finish line some three lengths ahead of R. L. Pearsons Champfleury. Here and now, it must be stated that the majority of War Port backers rooted him across the line and then made a break for the pay-off windows.

Jacamar on Right Path

But the third horse at the time. Jacamar, owned by J. Fred Adams, Jr., and 15 lengths back, did not follow the leaders into the finish line. He went over the jump to the right of the finish for the simple reason that the race was not over.

Jockey Harold Cruz, inexperienced in the ways of steeplechase riding, either forgot his arithmetic or was dizzy from circling the ring. He was in charge of War Port and had put up a masterful ride over 14 of the jumps, but the event called for 18 fences.

Cruz became aware of his mistake directly after crossing the line. He swung his mount around, went back on the course and trailed the others of the field to the wire.

Jockey W. Poland, who had never won a race, was helped in his decision to continue racing because Owner Adams was in the infield and shouted to him. Poland went on with Jacamar. The others in the field followed him around. Jockey E. Mitchell, a veteran rider, was so disgusted with himself for following War Port off the course that he just sat on Champfleury in the center of the field.

Wins By 10 Lengths

Jacamar had a long lead at the final jump and landed sideways. Jockey Poland went up on his neck and then settled back in the saddle. Jacamar finished ten lengths ahead of Cyntan with Spinach a distant third, while the majority of the customers booed. Jacamar paid $42.20 to win and Cyntah returned $71.70 to place.

The race, however, was not a joke to Jockey George Lambert. He was astride Star Glee and was knocked out of the saddle at the first fence. He suffered a broken leg.

After interviewing Jockeys Cruz and Mitchell, who pulled the "Fred Merkle," the stewards ordered them suspended for the remainder of the meeting. The officials also announced that Jockey Hernandez had been given five days for rough riding in the fifth race aboard Pirsit.

Selections at Cumberland

Dear Al:

Jockey Danny Scocca, Washington boy injured last Thursday, is resting comfortably in the Allegheny Hospital. He has a broken right arm and possible head injuries. His pretty wife is making the hospital her headquarters. Bernie Bond, after years on the race track, pulled a Prince of Wales and fell off a pony the other morning. One of the Benningites comes up with a suggestion of merit. In the case of a foul, he wants the announcement to be made as to who is claiming the foul and against whom. In the case of a disqualification, he wants the public to hear the cause of disqualification. The Hawaiian Beachcombers, from the Claryville Inn, play guitars at night and horses in the afternoon. They are best in the first instance. Word comes from Waterfield, N. J., of the death of the father of Jockey J. Servant. Trainer Dan Chamblin, in scratching Forest Charm from yesterday's steeplechase, said that the gelding had not fully recovered from injuries sustained when he ran a nail in his foot at Bel Air. My Delaware Park correspondent tells me that Jockey Chuck Charlton, after getting over pneumonia, was forced to undergo an operation. He is in the Wilmington General Hospital and wants his friends to write to him. Today's program is one of the best arranged by Racing Secretary Eddie Brennan since the half-mile season opened. There will be a steeplechase and a flat handicap. The Paul Sanfords entertained the champ at breakfast in their trailer. Jockey George Cardoza has an infected finger which is keeping him out of the saddle. Probably will get back into action next week. In writing of Jockey Buddy Root's brother recently, I referred to him as George. The likable youngster's name is Dale. The stable boys from our barn climbed the mountain opposite the track and enjoyed the caves. They were going to take me but couldn't locate a crane. Did somebody say that I couldn't get my head in a cave? See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—Mayfern is speedy and consistent and deserves the call in this rather open affair. Has the foot to make the most of the inside post position. The Hughes entry of Distant Star and Misty Eye is formidable and will be prominent. Miss Neptune probably is better than rated.

Second race—Hurdy Gurdy knows the way around the sharp turns and is fit as hands make horses. Should get to the top of these. Counora has been rested and has worked well. Netta Wood gets in with a feather assignment and is a threat.

Third ract—Tam o'Shanter won impressively last out. Must give weight to his rivals, but I'm going to string along. Quaker Street and Rouge Catalan, recent winners, are a shade behind the top one on the figures.

Fourth race—Gay Prank found too much class for her at the finish of last Thursday's effort. She needs only to run back to that race to defeat this kind. Doctor's Nurse is a hard-knocking filly and runs honest races. Deserves attention. Honey Maid will be helped by light weight.

Fifth race—Sure Touch could be the right one on this field. Closed gamely behind excellent sprinters last out and favors today's long route. Sky Hostess should go to the front, save ground, and must be caught. Squabble for the minor award.

Sixth race—Briar Bird seems suited by the 5 furlongs of this event. I'm going to make her the best of the day. Way Out has speed but may not be able to cope with the top one. Never Home for the show end.

Seventh race—I'm going to take a shot at Bellthorn in this field. Probably will get to the front and is likely to stick it out. Goodwine is dropping down a peg. Maetake for the show.

Eighth race—The Swagman, despite high weight, deserves the call in the day's finale. Extra Good and Sea Finn should be prominent contenders.

Best bet—BRIAR BIRD.

Brisk Workout Is Held Here By Kid Cocoa

Louis Kid Cocoa, No. 1 ranking welterweight of the world, went through a brisk workout yesterday at Turner's Arena in preparation for his Monday night's ten-round fight against Washington's George Abrams at Griffith Stadium.

The Puerto Rican went two rounds each with Ken Stribling, Stoney Lewis, and "Smiling Kid" Chris in the presence of 200 spectators and Comanager George Shepherd who is down from New York for the fight.

Of the sparmates only Stribling was able to withstand the flawless attack of the welterweight contender. Abrams' opponent cuffed Lewis around the ring, connecting at will. Against Chris, Cocoa shot repeated rights and lefts which found their mark with piston-stroke accuracy.

The Kid appeared in excellent shape. He drilled for about an hour and a quarter, then Shepherd and Trainer Frankie Garcia called it a day. Final drills are set for today at the arena starting at 1:30 p. m., with the public admitted free of charge.

Trainer Garcia revealed yesterday that he was Cocoa's first professional opponent. That was seven years ago in Shreveport, La., where he was kayoed and since that day has been working as a trainer instead of a target.

Abrams has been working at Madame Bey's in New Jersey, where among other things, he has to trim down to 160 pounds. Chris Dundee, manager of the Washington fighter, posted $500 a few days ago as forfeit money in case Abrams fails to make that weight by 2 p. m. Monday, the time of the weighing-in.

Cocoa's comanagers announced Thursday that they would ask an inspection of the scales by the weights and measures commission before the weigh-in.

Anaconda Gets Defense Contract

Butte, Mont., Aug. 9 (AP).—A contract to supply 240,000 long tons of manganese ores to the Federal Government for national defense purposes during the next three years has been signed by the Anaconda Copper Mining Co.

The contract calls for delivery of 80,000 long tons per year.

Production of ore will begin as quickly as arrangements can be completed for operating the vast manganese-bearing ore bodies in the Emma Mine in Butte and in adjacent property.

The Anaconda company will spend an estimated $1,500,000 at the mining properties in Butte and for construction of a nodulizing plant at the Anaconda reduction works, and conversion of copper-concentrating equipment into manganese-handling machinery, spokesmen said.

Foreign Markets

London, Aug. 9 (AP).—The securities market got a firmer grip on prices today after Thursday's modest slide. Upward price adjustments, however, were small and turnover remained at recent skimpy levels. Small gains dotted the government bond list and many industrials, especially tobaccos, came out at higher prices. Rubbers held steady in line with the commodity and domestic mills hardened a trifle. Kaffirs and oils moved evenly.

Metal and Motor Shares Give Fillip to List; Better Class of Leadership Noted in Trade

New York, Aug. 9.—Stocks did a little better today and there was a slight increase in volume but there was no positive sign that a break in the log-jam of trading which has been maintained through the summer, is imminent. Curiously enough it was the metal shares which led the upturn and metal prices have been reduced rather generally in the last week. The spot lead price was reduced another 10 points today to a new low for the year.

Motors were also instrumental in giving a lift to the list as a whole, and auto assembles this week are at the year's bottom. There was, however, ample reason why a large number of listed issues should gain some ground. Earnings have been impressive for both the second quarter and first half for virtually all groups and the professional forecasters believe the second half will show even more favorable results except, perhaps, in the oils.

At the close, the 100 key stocks were ahead 0.24 point and the independent aircraft index firmed more than a third of a point. Transfers on the big board totaled 308,390 shares. In the bond section, domestic corporates moved ahead with stocks and a number of foreigns eased, including Norwegian and some Australians.

The most encouraging feature of the stock market was not the price improvement, but the better class of leadership. Steel common, General Motors, General Electric, Commonwealth Edison and other old favorites were among the day's active leaders, most of them at substantially improved prices, including more than a point for motors and ⅝ for steel.

International Paper & Power returned to the limelight with a ⅞ point gain on 13,200 shares, the most active issue of the day. Curtiss-Wright, which had advanced ⅝ on Thursday added a like amount and was traded to the extent of nearly 8,000 shares. Consolidated oil developed late activity when a block of 5,700 shares sold at 6, unchanged. Its total sales for the day were 8,900 shares.

Rails held about even and their failure to attract more customers at this stage of the market and in view of improvement in traffic and earnings, is somewhat disappointing to the street.

Mail order shares were up small amounts. Extreme gains were noted in Eastman Kodak and International Nickel preferred, due, however, to thin markets rather than demand. Allied Chemical finished 4 points ahead and gains of a point or more were recorded by Johns-Manville, Union Carbide and United Aircraft.

Railroad equipment issues reflected war order prospects here and there. Moderate investment buying sent American Telephone up a point at its high of the day. It closed a half ahead.

Small changes were the rule today in listed bonds. United States Treasury issues eased slightly, while New York City Transit unification bonds held their ground. Best rated corporate issues tended to improve.

Speculative railroad bonds showed more small gains than losses, with almost all changes inconsequential. Some of the Boston & Maine liens fell rather sharply. Portland General Electric 4½s dropped more than 4 points, owing to suits for collection of bank loans.

Most industrials were somewhat better, with paper stocks in the van of the procession. Share privilege issues improved slightly, while other special groups were dull.

Latin-American dollar bonds were irregular, notwithstanding the effort in Washington to lend $500,000,000 to the countries south of the Rio Grande. Japanese issues were marked upward on the British decision to withdraw from Shanghai. German and Italian bonds were in modest demand, but Canadian and Australian issues drifted lower. Norwegian, Belgian and other bonds of occupied countries were soft, save for a few inactive issues that appeared on the tape for the first time in weeks.

Large D. C. Investment

Mortgage loans on District of Columbia properties, amounting to $3,170,500, were held by Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co. on June 30, it was reported here yesterday. Its assets invested in the District of Columbia at the end of 1939 were approximately $5,782,000.

Policyholders and beneficiaries throughout the country received $25,178,198 from the Massachusetts Mutual in the first six months of this year. During the period 15,380 new policies for $63,652,172 were sold.

Asked what effect domestic reactions to the European war may be expected to have on the sales of life insurance, John F. Cremen, the company's general agent with offices in the Evans Building here, said that life insurance sales probably will increase as our national defense program progresses. He said that life insurance sales in the United States rapidly increased during the World War and the years immediately following. It is to be expected, he said, that the selective training and service bill introduced by Senator Edward R. Burke will cause men to think of the need for life insurance to safeguard their families against impending hazards.

Newport News Firm Amends Charter to Expand Capital

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Aug. 9.—Converted stock of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. soon may be offered on the New York Stock Exchange.

Under an amendment to the company charter obtained yesterday from the State Corporation Commission, the existing 100,000 shares of $100 par value stock would be converted into a maximum of 1,580,000 shares.

The company, now owned by a syndicate of New York and other Northern bankers, could issue 1,500,000 shares of common stock with a par value of $1 and 80,000 shares of $5 cumulative convertible preferred stock without par value.

Only 880,000 of this total is being issued at present. Of the 80,000 shares of preferred stock, the company is selling 15,000 shares to financial houses at $97.50 per share. The remaining 65,000 shares of the preferred and the 800,000 issue of common are being turned in for the 100,000 shares of existing $100 stock.

Thus, holders of the present stock will get eight shares of the common and 65/100 share of the new preferred for each share of the old stock they own.

It was understood at the Corporation Commission that most of the new common stock would be offered on the stock exchange at a price of about $23 a share. The 15,000 shares of new preferred also may go on the market.

The big shipyard has more than $286,000,000 in uncompleted contracts as of July 15.

Seven-Month Sales Of Autos Reported 22% Above 1939

Detroit, Aug. 9 (AP).—The Automobile Manufacturers Association estimated today that factory sales of passenger cars and trucks in the first seven months of 1940 totaled 2,776,740 units, an increase of 22 per cent over the corresponding period of 1939.

Placing July factory sales at 237,300 units, the association survey said that while this volume was 9 per cent above the corresponding month a year ago, it was 35 per cent under that of June, reflecting the usual cessation of production during the model change-over period.

Ward's automotive reports today estimated the week's production of motor vehicles at 11,635, describing the volume as at the "low point for 1940," and predicting a speedy advance from the present levels in forthcoming weeks.

Commerce Bureau Lauded On New Income Study Plan

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser
Economic Commentator.

In view of the growing political tendency to regard national income estimates as actual mirrors of economic progress or retrogression, the Department of Commerce is to be commended for its recent announcement of a desire to improve the quality of the figures.

Estimates of National income over long periods of years have little meaning unless they are translated into terms of food, shelter, comfort goods and tools. Moreover, the routine figures tend to hide improvement through the years in the quality of goods and the addition of extra items, such as radios, automobiles and electrical appliances, to the average family budget. Likewise, price shifts from year to year affect the significance of National income estimates.

Mr. Rukeyser

What the department proposes is a step in the right direction, but the full progress will not be made until the Internal Revenue Bureau makes available to the Department of Commerce full data for compiling a consolidated short form income account for all the 477,839 corporations reporting to it each year for tax purposes.

When such data are available, including wages and salaries paid, goods and services purchased from outside the corporation fold, taxes, depreciation, etc., then the basis will be available for exact photographic snapshots of the economic life of the American people, in place of the current estimates, which are marred in part by guesswork and by arbitrary assumptions.

The new emphasis in the Department of Commerce income studies will be to express income in terms of things created in a given year. This will involve counting. An attempt will be made to reflect changes in inventories as well as the amount of goods actually moving into consumption. Then there will be special studies of goods produced which remain unconsumed but available to aid in future production—the so-called capital goods, the tools of industry. Academic studies indicate that on the average the increment of additional tools each year amounts to but 4 per cent of total production. Depreciation and maintenance, run twice as large as actual expansion of existing capital facilities.

As candid camera shots of business become available in terms of simple arithmetic in double entry form, demagogues and theorists will tend to lose some of their power.

Robert F. Binkerd, formerly vice president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, suggests, in the Atlantic Monthly, a plan to restore railroad prosperity through eliminating unprofitable and obsolete mileage.

Mr. Binkerd estimates that some 70,000 out of some 260,000 miles in the United States does not pay its way through line-haul service. If such mileage is of any value to the owners, it is only as feeders to the main line. At least, 40,000 miles (chiefly single track) could be prudently dispensed with, Mr. Binkerd believes.

"The question arises," Mr. Binkerd concludes, "if the time has not come to establish a substantial depreciation charge annually against all mileage which is not earning is way. Although net operating income might be somewhat lowered for a time, the railroad cash position would rise, because no taxes on income or net earnings would have to be paid on depreciation accruals.

"These in turn could be used—at least in part—to restore bonds repurchased below par, and thus fixed charges could be gradually reduced and the profit-and-lost surplus increased by the difference between par and the purchase price of the retired bonds."

"Certainly some plan can be worked out whereby the railroads can gain relief from the losses involved in owning and operating unprofitable mileage, strengthen their financial structures, and increase their net earnings."

The time has come to face the facts in American railroading, and to squeeze the obsolescence out of transport systems which were conceived before the era of the automoble and good highways.

Man of the Month

The Man of the Month contest is sponsored jointly by The Washington Post and Station WJSV. Following each of the Nats' games, Arch McDonald will award points to Washington players as he deems performances merit. The Man of the Month will be presented with a $50 merchandise order by The Post.

By Arch McDonald
Station WJSV Baseball Broadcaster

Gerald Walker was the most important figure in the Nats' triumph over the Red Sox yesterday and thus makes a long gain in the race for Man of the Month honors. Points on the basis of yesterday's game were distributed as follows:

To Walker, seven points, because he made four of the Nats' nine hits, and because he led off the seventh and ninth innings with singles that touched off Washington rallies.

To Joe Krakauskas, six points, because he pitched two-hit shut-out ball in the four innings he worked, after relieving Dutch Leonard and thus kept the Nats in the game.

To Rick Ferrell, five points, because his hit with the bases full in the ninth broke up the game.

To Jimmy Bloodworth, five points, because his first-inning triple and fourth-inning single figured in three of the Nats' six runs.

To Johnny Welaj, three points, because his pinch hit drove in a run in the fourth.

To Alex Carrasquel, two points, because he pitched a hitless ninth inning in a relief role. The totals:

Sidney Hudson	20	George Case	7
Ken Chase	20	Rick Ferrell	7
Gee Walker	19	Joe Krakauskas	6
Cecil Travis	14	Buddy Lewis	5
Jimmy Bloodworth	15	Rene Monteagudo	4
Jimmy Pofahl	9	Johnny Welaj	3
Dutch Leonard	8	Walter Masterson	2

Eagles' Coach Elated Over Club's Chances

By the Associated Press

West Chester, Pa., Aug. 9.—A veteran-studded Philadelphia Eagles football squad opened preseason practice in this Philadelphia suburban college town today with what Owner-Coach Bert Bell described as the "best prospects in the club's history."

Basing his hopes on the greatest number of experienced players he has ever had, Bell declared "I'll be very much disappointed if we're not in the running this year." Last season the Eagles finished next to last in the National Pro League.

"In the last 10 to 12 years, no one ever won the title except with a veteran club," Bell explained. "After trying every other way without success, I've come to the conclusion it's impossible.

Winter deals in which he traded draft rights to recent college graduates brought Bell such veteran players as Milt Trost and Russ Thompson, tackles; Lester McDonald, end, and Dick Bassi, guard, all of last year's Chicago Bears; Ray George, former Detroit tackle, and Chuck Cherundolo, Cleveland center.

In addition, Bell has 17 holdovers from last year's Eagle squad. They include "Slingshot" Davey O'Brien, of Texas Christian fame, who started in his pro debut last year, and Franny Murray, ace punter, and three line stalwarts in Joe Carter, end, and Ted Schmitt and Bill Hughes, guards.

Despite the emphasis on veterans, Bell also is counting on some of his 27 rookies taking part in the month's practice. Elmer "One Man Gang" Hackney, former Kansas State back; Frank Emmons, 200-pound fullback from Oregon University; Eberle Schultz, a guard from Oregon State, and two ends, Joe Wendlich, of Oregon, and Don Looney, of Texas Christian, stand out.

Bell believes the two Texans—O'Brien and Looney should "make a great pro passing combination."

Scoring Records Fall As Wisconsin Triumphs

Nats Defeat Bosox, 6 to 5, With a Rally

hit off Fred Ostermueller, Boston's starting pitcher. Osty walked Lewis and Travis, and with two out, Bloodworth drove them home with a three-bagger down the leftfield line.

The Red Sox came back at Leonard with a run that restored them to a 3-2 lead in the second inning when Tabor led off with a triple. Ostermueller dumped a hit in front of the plate and was safe when Ferrell, thinking Tabor was attempting to score, bluffed a throw to Leonard at the plate. Tabor held his base, but scored a bit later on a squeeze bunt by Dominic Di Maggio.

Boston improved its lead to 5-2 in the third inning when Cronin and Foxx led off with singles. A sacrifice by Finney moved them along, and they both scored on Spencer's single to right, Foxx stopping at third until he saw Buddy Lewis bobble the ball momentarily.

With Krakauskas holding the Red Sox in check, the Nats cut Boston's lead to 5-3 in the fourth after Bloodworth beat out an infield hit. Ferrell drew a walk, and Pinch-hitter Johnny Welaj got the run home with a single to left.

The Nats drove Ostermueller out in the fifth when Lewis drew a walk and Walker singled before the left-hander could get anybody out. Bagby appeared in this crisis and turned the Nats back scoreless, chiefly because he struck out Bloodworth.

Bagby Checks Nats

Again in the seventh the Nats appeared on their way to a big inning, but Bagby limited them to a single run. Walker led off with his third hit—a single to center—and Travis drew a walk, but Bloodworth popped up trying to bunt. Myer later walked, and a run scored on Pofahl's infield out, but Rick Ferrell fouled out to leave the Nats trailing, 5-4.

Krakky was lifted for a pinch hitter in the eighth, and Alex Carrasquel held the Sox hitless in the ninth. They failed to score despite the fact that Finney, first up, was safe on Pofahl's muff. Carrasquel boldly threw Tabor's bunt to second for a force play, and a bit later Tabor was caught stealing by Ferrell.

You know what happened in the ninth.

Listen! with Glynn

Elinor Lee's half hour of home economics over WJSV between 8:45 and 9:15 a. m. is being interrupted seven times today. Fairly long interruptions, too. But she doesn't think there'll be any complaint. For the seven breaks are being given to seven Washington youngsters who are the pick of a crowd of among 1,500 children who auditioned before her last Saturday aboard a Wilson Line steamer running from Washington to Marshall Hall on "Kiddies' Day." Those you'll hear are singers Frances Six, Richard McCullough and Carmela Savarese; tap-dancers Gloria Grisso and Billy McCullough; Pianist Marianne Mitchell, and Accordionist Sammy Mawhood.

Vesta Eales' author-guest on her lit'ry show over WJSV between 12 and 12:15 today is Alice Rogers Hager of the Civil Aeronautics Authority here in Washington. Miss Hager's book, "Wings Over the Americas," is being very favorably reviewed throughout the country at the moment.

Edmond Taylor, the C. B. S. European correspondent who wrote "Strategy of Terror;" Robert Neville, foreign news editor of the New York tabloid PM; Fletcher Pratt, military expert of the New York Post, and Seymour Berkson, managing editor of International News Service, discuss America's defense problems on "The People's Platform" at 6 p. m. over WJSV. They're all supposed to know their stuff.

Church of the Week

Woodside Methodist Foresees One of Its Busiest Fall Seasons

Many New Groups Now Being Formed, Pastor Discloses

By Robert Tate Allen

With several new congregational groups in the process of organization, and the other plans being mapped, the Woodside Methodist Church of Silver Spring, Md., is anticipating one of its most successful fall and winter seasons in its history, according to Dr. Ralph Dela Smith, pastor.

Foremost are the formation of the new board of Christian education and the Women's Society of Christian Service, and the extension of the younger-adult work, the latter covering the 24 to 40-year-old group. All are in line with the trend of the now-united Methodist Church.

The new educational board set-up, Dr. Smith explained yesterday, will have representatives from every department of the church and Sunday school, from the Boy Scouts to the board of trustees.

While formal elections of officers will take place in September, Dr. Howard E. Dozier, church school superintendent, is acting president of the new board. He is a long-time member of the congregation, and employed as economist in the Department of Agriculture.

Study Committee Named

The new Women's Society of Christian Service, which will coordinate all the women's activities of the congregation, has appointed a study committee to plan formal merger of the Women's Home and Foreign Missionary and Ladies' Aid Societies. They include the following:

Mrs. H. H. Howlett, Mrs. Beryl English, Mrs. Howard Dozier, Mrs. E. J. Bunker, Mrs. J. D. Draper, Mrs. Howard Smith, Mrs. A. L. Googins, Mrs. W. G. Folsom, Mrs. Benjamin Harlan, Mrs. Howard Casey and Mrs. J. C. Lusby.

In connection with the Washington metropolitan area phase of the National Christian Mission, which comes here in February, 1941, the Woodside congregation will take an active part in the fall visitation evangelistic campaign, employing a deaconess to assist in the survey. Dr. Smith will appoint a laymen's committee from his church for the work.

Pastor Proud of School

Dr. Smith, pastor since 1922, is proud of his church school, which has maintained an excellent attendance record throughout the hot summer months. From June 1 to July 21 the total enrollment was more than 3,500, or an average of about 500 each Sunday. There are more than 1,000 scholars on the roll.

Miss Margaret Thomas, religious education director of the congregation, conducted a daily vacation bible school for several weeks, it proving very popular. She will have an important role on the new educational board.

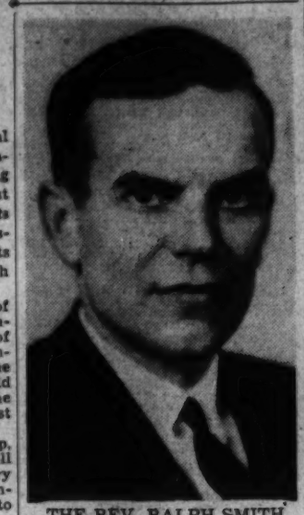
In connection with religious educational work, it is interesting to note that Bishop Adna Wright Leonard, new resident prelate of the Methodist Church, Baltimore Conference, and successor to Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, was recently elected president of the board of Christian education of the now-united Methodist Church.

Like most modern churches, Woodside has found it necessary to arrange parking facilities for autos of its members, and recently bought a 175 by 200-foot plot of land on the south side of the church at 8814 Georgia avenue northwest. There will be 50 feet of parking space. A parsonage will be erected on part of the site in the near future. The ground was bought through the church's board of trustees, of which Garland W. Wolfe, well-known Silver Spring auto dealer, is president, and the congregation's quarterly conference.

Musical Activities Emphasized

Dr. Smith several days ago expressed the hope of launching special Sunday night programs in the coming season. They will include a worship service at 7:45 p. m., followed by a program in the parish hall, with the congregation's young people serving refreshments, and group singing and fellowship enjoyed. Congregational dinners, with guest speakers will be held on Thursday once monthly.

Musical activities, strongly emphasized at Woodside, center around the three vested choirs—junior, high school and senior—all under the general direction of Mrs. Alden Emery. Composer of some of the choir's anthems and other numbers, she is a graduate of the Oberlin College Conservatory of Music. An impressive recessional opens worship services.



THE REV. RALPH SMITH

Bible class work, in which growing interest is being manifested, embraces the Everyman's class, of which Paul Lehman, chief clerk at St. Elizabeths Hospital, is teacher, and William C. Elting, president; the Hansen class of women, of which Mrs. Paul J. Hansen is teacher, and Mrs. Walter Kirby, president, and the young women's class, with Mrs. Robert W. Hamilton as president, and Joseph Voskuil, as teacher.

Youth work at Woodside, which is making great strides, centers around three societies—the junior nigh, high school and young people's units, led by Robert Smith, John Googins and Richard Googins, respectively. There also is the young married couple's class, taught by Grover Pooley, business manager of National Park College.

Catholic Leaders Will Address Park Meetings

Mrs. Linda Maley O'Hara, vice president of the Washington Catholic Evidence Guild, will direct its meeting in Franklin Park from 3 to 5 p. m. tomorrow.

On the program with her will be the Rev. Alonzo McDonnell, C. S. P., who will speak on "Revelation," Miss Elizabeth Raney and Andrew McHugh.

Dr. Edward J. Heffron will have charge of the afternoon meeting in Public Library Park and will introduce Miss Edith Jarboe, Donald O'Callaghan and the Rev. Wilbur Wheeler.

The Rev. Dr. William H. Russell, of the department of religion of Catholic University and vice moderator of the Guild, will be chairman of the evening meeting in Public Library Park, with Miss Mary Ellen Dashiell, Miss Alice Hill and Leon Kotsko appearing on the program.

At the Franklin Park meeting from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m., Charles Ferry will introduce Mrs. Agnes Stewart, Miss Catherine Jarboe and Clemens J. Polesz.

The Y. M. C. A. open air service in Lincoln Park at 4 p. m. tomorrow will bring an address by the Rev. George D. Stevens, guest minister at Metropolitan Baptist Church. Phi Gamma Kappa Bible class for young men of the church will conduct the service, with Jack Frost, class president, in charge.

"THE CHURCH'S ONE FOUNDATION"
SAMUEL J. STONE
The Church's one foundation
Is Jesus Christ our Lord;
She is His new creation
By water and the Word;
From heav'n He came and sought her
To be His holy bride;
With His own blood He bought her,
And for her life He died.
Little Stories of GREAT HYMNS
This favorite hymn of dedication reiterates the central truths of the Christian Faith found in the Apostles' Creed. It is a fitting choice when a cornerstone is to be laid, for it suggests the words of Jesus, "The stone which the builders rejected, the same is to become the head of the corner."
